Developer wants to build homes on submerged land behind Wellington Arms

By Dan Moffett

Judy Hollnagel had a long and successful business career in Milwaukee, but she never made a better deal than the one she struck in Ocean Ridge during a Florida vacation back in 1968.

Hollnagel heard about a condo project under construction across from Oceanfront Park and decided its prime location between the ocean and Intracoastal Waterway was worth an investment.

"I put down $100," she said. "That's what things were going for back then. We've had a place here ever since."

The three concrete buildings with 49 units would become known as the Wellington Arms Condominiums. Judy and Harold Hollnagel would become known as the first family of the close-knit condo community.

From their third-floor bedroom window, the couple can look out and see the glistening Atlantic waters and the Oceanfront Park beach. From their back door, they can see a mangrove-rich lagoon sanctuary for a thriving array of wildlife.

Town delves into height of new condo

Council to revisit issue after manager's inspection differs with Jordan's complaint

By Dan Moffett

South Palm Beach council members want to double-check measurements of the 3550 South Ocean condominium project to make sure it complies with the town's building code.

At issue are the structure's height and the area set aside for green space on the site.

Councilwoman Stella Gaddy Jordan says she is concerned that the building's six stories above a garage exceed the town's height limit and that the structure's footprint does not preserve enough open space.

"They're both terribly incorrect," Jordan said of the two code issues.

A spokesperson for the developer says Jordan is mistaken.

"3550 South Ocean has obtained all necessary approvals from the Town of South Palm Beach and is fully compliant with all regulations," the spokesperson said.

The councilwoman blames the town's building official for not bringing changes in the project to the council for approval. She said she believes the developer, Manhattan-based DDG real estate investment group, and contractor KAST Construction did not adhere

Former POW recalls his time in 'Hanoi Hilton' with late Sen. McCain

By Mary Hladky

Although retired Air Force Lt. Col. Mel Pollack's military service ended decades ago, his commitment to service and veterans has endured.

Pollack was on his 78th combat mission flying an F-4 Phantom when he was shot down and captured by the North Vietnamese in 1967. He was imprisoned in the infamous "Hanoi Hilton" with John McCain, then a Navy pilot, later a U.S. senator whose funeral services riveted the nation in late August and early September.

Freed after 2,068 days as a prisoner of war, Pollack remained with the Air Force, retiring after 20 years of service. He then held various corporate positions and eventually moved from Delray Beach

10 years of publishing in the sunshine — and other days

Ten years. Who'd a thunk it? Not me, that's for sure. I was convinced print would be so crippled by digital that we'd get only five years out of our startup publication at most.

Wow, was I wrong.

I knew there was a serious risk of this coastal area becoming a local news desert, but I didn't know whether anyone cared. You, dear readers, have shown us that you do care about local news. And you've proven that delivering news in print and to your driveway is a model that still works.

Yes, we have 3,500 members on our website and our stories frequently get over 1,000 views on Facebook, but the amount that digital delivery contributes to our business model is minute.

We make our money from print. We deliver more than 17,000 print copies each month.

So why does this news model still work?

Simple: People want to be part of a community. They want to know what's happening around them. They want to see a reflection of who they are today and who they have been. They want to know what the future might bring.

And print is durable. It allows us to hold a journalistic mirror up to both the beautiful and the not-so-beautiful in our area and gives us all a sense of belonging to something larger than ourselves. That is a critical element of any community, of any society.

Partners understand

Our advertising partners understand this. They support our journalism even when we write on topics they'd rather we didn't. They understand that they play a large role in defining how our community is viewed. Their support through these past 10 years has exceeded our expectations.

I shouldn't be surprised, since the individuals and companies who support our local journalism are our neighbors. Like us, they live, work and play here. Advertising with us is just one of the many generous ways they give back to our community. We admire their local commitment and are grateful for their continued support.

Committed staff

The amazing journalists who work with us each month do so out of love for the work and a commitment to their craft. Trust me, they don't sit through five-hour commission meetings for the money. No one goes into community journalism to get rich. The hours spent each month contributing to this newspaper are committed with a desire to provide readers with necessary information to make informed decisions about local government, community and life.

I'm fortunate to work with some of the best storytellers in South Florida and grateful they've chosen to be a part of our newspaper's family. I'm also thankful for all of our hard-working support staff. It really does take a village.

Challenges ahead

We cover so many municipalities that other media ignore, that some months our resources get stretched pretty thin. And as with many other small, family businesses, our employees are getting older. Some want more personal time, some feel a need to make more money and some simply need health insurance.

After a decade of publishing — beginning in the midst of the Great Recession — I understand these concerns. Someday, I too would like to retire. But right now there's so much more our newspaper would like to do, so much that needs to be reported, so much more to share with our readers about where we live.

So ... when the naysayers tell us our business model is obsolete, we'll keep on. When elected officials refuse to provide public records, we'll keep pressing for them. When someone calls our work "fake news," we'll put out another edition.

We've learned a lot this past decade: how to stay quick and nimble, how to admit mistakes and, most of all, how to say thank you to our readers for your continued support.

Thank you. We are deeply grateful.

Boca philanthropist recognized as a very Helping Hand

By Rich Pollack

Arthur Remillard is a generous man.

At 87, Remillard cringes when he sees people on television, both in the U.S. and abroad, who don't have enough to eat. It's heartbreaking for him to see people living in poverty and struggling to get by.

And it brings back memories.

"I know what it's like to feel poor," he says.

A successful businessman who built an insurance company that, at one point, insured one of every three automobiles in Massachusetts, Remillard is now in a position to help people in need.

Through his philanthropy, he supports soup kitchens, hospitals and medical school programs in his hometown of Worcester, Mass. For the past 10 years, he has spread his generosity to organizations in South Florida, including 4KIDS of South Florida and Habitat for Humanity.

Perhaps his biggest impact in Florida, however, has been with Boca Helping Hands, where he all but single-handedly funded the organization's $3 million home, a 15,000-square-foot facility that serves about 175 noontime meals to people in need. The building has a food pantry that distributes thousands of pounds of groceries every year.

Job training programs are offered there, too. Staff members are on hand to help connect people in need with other services.

"Arthur is my patron saint," says Gary Peters, president of the board of Boca Helping Hands. "He's the one responsible for us being in this building. It's a facility that impacts thousands of people."

Last month Remillard was honored with special recognition during Boca Helping Hands' Celebration event.

"Arthur has always been encouraging and a strong supporter," Peters said. "He's been there every step of the way."

Remillard says that when he first arrived in South Florida about 10 years ago he was looking for an organization to support.

He Googled food pantry and Boca Raton because he had donated to similar organizations up north. Boca Helping Hands popped up immediately.

Remillard went to meet with Peters and discovered that the organization was a lot smaller than those he typically supported.

At the time, Boca Helping Hands was little more than a small soup kitchen working out of the Friendship Baptist Church, serving about 36 meals a day. The facility occupied a mere 900 square feet.

"It wasn't much of an operation," Remillard said, adding that meals were served only four days a week.

Seeing a great need in the community, Remillard issued a challenge to Peters.

"I said 'go find a building,'" he recalls.

It took four years and a lot of searching, but together Peters and Remillard found the perfect spot on Northwest First Court.

When the building opened in 2010, Boca Helping Hands served 80 meals a day and began serving six days a week. At one point during the height of the recession, the organization served 225 meals a day.

In addition to noontime meals and the food pantry service, Boca Helping Hands serves between 60 and 70 family meals one night a week.

For Remillard, philanthropy comes as the result of his success in business.

Growing up in Worcester, Remillard joined the Navy after high school. After his discharge, he went to Clark College in his hometown and graduated with a degree in accounting. He became a partner in five supermarkets and then went into the insurance business, opening his own agency.

In 1972 he started Commerce Insurance, becoming a major insurer in Massachusetts. He sold the firm in 2006 for $2.2 billion.

"I grew up saying I would do well, but I never thought I would do this well," he says.

For Remillard, whose father was a janitor and whose family was too poor to think about giving to charity, philanthropy has become an important part of his life. It's something he has shared with his five children and grandchildren.

It's not unusual, Peters says, for members of Remillard's family to come to Boca Helping Hands and volunteer when they're in town.

That's something that Remillard says makes him proud.

"I want people to think of me as a businessman who got involved in philanthropy and who passed the idea of philanthropy onto his family," he said. ★

Project would harm vital natural area in Ocean Ridge

For health and safety and money for the Town of Ocean Ridge, the county and the state, and as an owner at Ocean Park Manor, adjacent to the proposed Swain project, I would like to lodge my strongest objection to this permit.

Among the factors that the Army Corps of Engineers must consider when reviewing the permit application are safety, economics, aesthetics, recreation, the needs and welfare of the people and general environmental concerns. It would be right for the Corps to deny this permit because allowing any development of the area under consideration poses a serious health and safety risk.

It is not new that the proposed development cannot guarantee that the abundance of birds, fish and plant life now in that space will survive the construction. The proposed development will put not only wildlife at risk, but also the safety of the many people who use the lagoon for recreation.

In truth, it is only the vital natural resources of the lagoon that balance out the ever-increasing pollution that plagues our area.

To save our lagoon, we must rely on the powerful enforcement authority of the Corps. People young and old come daily into the lagoon on paddleboards, kayaks, fishing boats and even Jet Skis. Their discovery of all manner of wading birds, jumping fish and groups of manatees (including pups) provides fun and joy.

The investment in preserving this tiny eco-tourist spot has the proven advantage of bringing money to the local economy.

Hopefully, representatives of the Corps have had an opportunity to visit the lagoon and to take comfort in the fact that denying this permit will guarantee that the needs and welfare of the people who live in and visit this area will be protected.

Thank you for all the work the Corps does every day to protect and preserve our natural resources.

Owner thankful no one was home during fire at historic estate

By Steve Plunkett

A fire at the oceanfront Pugliese estate in Gulf Stream closed down State Road A1A for six hours while Delray Beach firefighters worked to control the blaze and extinguish intermittent hot spots.

No one was hurt in the Oct. 29 fire, which apparently started in a three-car garage between the guest house and the historic mansion. Firefighters did rescue two dogs, Delray Beach Fire Rescue spokesman Kevin Saxton said.

Homeowner Laura Pugliese, who with her husband, Anthony, were driving back from Jupiter, said when the fire alarm company called, she first thought it was a false alarm.

"I think it's an actual fire, because there's a lot of 911 calls," she said the dispatcher told her.

Delray Fire Rescue was alerted at 5:50 p.m.

"When the first units arrived there was significant fire showing," Saxton said.

Town Manager Greg Dunham said he got to the scene about 7 o'clock. "I couldn't see flames, but there was smoke fully billowing out," he said.

Fourteen vehicles responded to the blaze, including Highland Beach's ladder truck, which Delray Beach operates. The fire was under control in about an hour, Saxton said, but firefighters stayed at the estate until about midnight.

"There were a lot of hot spots," Saxton said.

Pugliese said an SUV in the garage had a full tank of gas, which probably caused the explosion some people heard.

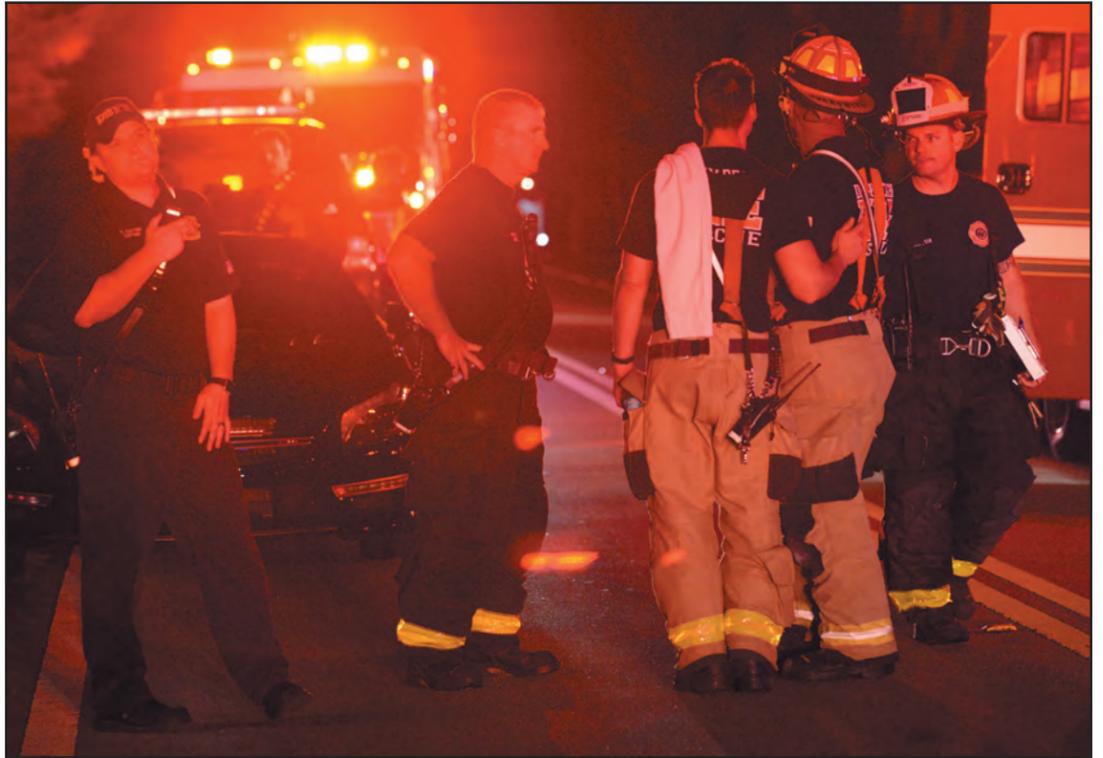

Ocean Ridge police diverted southbound A1A traffic onto Woolbright Road. Delray Beach police directed northbound motorists to turn around in the parking lot of the Gulf Stream Golf Club.

"We were lucky, very lucky," Laura Pugliese said. "No one was home, no one was hurt."

But she and her husband had to cope with having no power or lights. "We slept with all the doors and windows open last night," she said.

The Puglieses restored the Roaring '20s mansion rather than tear it down. It was built by a member of Gulf Stream's founding Phipps family.

An inspector for the state fire marshal's office was at their home the next day. The fire marshal would take a few days to report on the cause and other details, Saxton said. ★

CodeRED emergency system ready; town urges residents to enroll

By Steve Plunkett

Gulf Stream's new CodeRED emergency alert system is up and running.

"It is fully activated and ready to go," Town Manager Greg Dunham told town commissioners at their Oct. 12 meeting.

The system allows town officials to send residents warnings via phone calls, email and cellphone text messages. CodeRED also has a smartphone app. But residents have to sign up to participate. "It's not an automatic thing," Dunham said.

The town is paying provider OnSolve LLC $1,500 a year for the service, which otherwise is free to residents.

CodeRED is designed to send critical and time-sensitive communications such as alerts about missing children, emergency preparedness, wildfires, emergency evacuation notices, a public health crisis and criminal activity.

Gulf Stream joins Delray Beach, Highland Beach and Boca Raton in offering CodeRED. The program is easily tailored to reach large and small audiences.

"We could do the whole town, or we could do one block of a street. Actually it could be as little as one or two houses," Dunham said in July when he first pitched the idea to commissioners.

Some residents complained following Hurricane Irma last year that people in other cities got emergency notices on their cellphones, Dunham said then.

Vice Mayor Thomas Stanley, who was already signed up for Delray Beach's CodeRED alerts, said he received six or seven text messages a day during Irma.

Town Finance Director Rebecca Tew said she hopes to convert everyone who sent Town Hall an email address for official notices into CodeRED participants. She has 300 to 500 email addresses of residents, house managers "and also a lot of personal assistants."

Gulf Stream sent residents a letter urging them to go to the town's website and click on CodeRED to sign up.

Residents can choose a user name and password or register with a Google, Facebook or Twitter account.

In other business, Dunham said Comcast has hired a subcontractor, Cypress Communications, to put its cable television and internet lines underground, much like Florida Power & Light hired subcontractor Wilco to bury its electric lines. Cypress, which expects to spend 90 days on the job, will start from Golfview and work north.

"We're trying to get AT&T to start from the north side and move south," Dunham said. ★

Red tide tests show low or no presence at area beaches

By Henry Fitzgerald

Just as suddenly as red tide hit south Palm Beach County beaches a month ago, it went away. But officials say you can never be sure when these outbreaks — rare for our beaches compared to those on the Gulf Coast — will return.

"The latest results show the bacteria to be considered not present or at very low levels," said Michael Stahl, deputy director of Palm Beach County Environmental Resources Management. "It's certainly in decline from where we were at the end of September."

Officials are continuing to test at the county's beaches once a week, but that's down from twice a week at the height of the outbreak, Stahl said.

The latest round of tests by the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission at South County beaches took place Oct. 24 east of Ocean Inlet Park (very low), east of Gulfstream Park (not present), Delray Public Beach (not present), east of Spanish River Park (not present), Gumbo Limbo Nature Center (not present), east of Red Reef Park (not present), east of South Beach Park (very low), 2.9 miles east of the Boca Raton Inlet (not present) and South Inlet Park (very low).

"Countywide, we're looking pretty good," Stahl said.

At the end of September and beginning of October, beachgoers were complaining of runny noses, scratchy throats and burning eyes, as health officials confirmed the red tide.

Water samples from sites at south Palm Beach County beaches identified the presence of the Karenia brevis harmful algae bloom — the first appearance on Florida's southeast coast since 2006-07.

At one point officials discovered dead fish ashore just south of the Boynton Inlet.

Officials in Lantana closed the beach there, but officials farther south monitored the situation and flew warning flags to let beachgoers know the risk.

"It was here for about two weeks," said Kevin Saxton, public information officer for Delray Beach Fire Rescue. "We took down our warning flags on Oct. 12. I know it reduced the number of people on our beach at the time, but patrons are back. We're glad it's gone."

Boca Raton took a similar approach at city beaches, deciding to keep them open, but flying a red hazard flag and the purple sea pest flag, said Chrissy Gibson, city spokeswoman.

"We monitored the situation closely, and we are still monitoring," she said in an email. "We get daily reports from the lifeguards, are still taking samples at our beaches and are reviewing the results posted to the FWC map twice a week."

Officials cautioned that even though red tide outbreaks are rare for this part of the state, you can never say never.

"It could return," Stahl said. "It depends on the right environmental factors that allow for it to get into the Gulf Stream from the Gulf of Mexico and affect our beaches." ★

Abrams hired to lead Tri-Rail's governing agency

By Steve Plunkett

Palm Beach County Commissioner Steven Abrams, who leaves office Nov. 20, will spend only a few weeks unemployed before tackling his next job — as executive director

Abrams of the South Florida Regional Transportation Authority. His former colleagues on the SFRTA governing board hired him on a 9-1 vote to lead the agency that runs Tri-Rail, choosing his political savvy over the deep operational skills of rival job candidates.

"Oh, I'm thrilled," Abrams exclaimed as well-wishers congratulated him following the Oct. 26 vote. "I'm excited about the opportunity."

Abrams, who resigned as chairman of the governing board in May to apply for the director's position, dismissed concerns about his lack of operational expertise.

"I have the background to jump right in," he said.

The other finalists were Joe Giulietti, retired president of Metro-North Commuter Railroad in New York City and before that executive director of SFRTA for 13 years; Mikel Oglesby, SFRTA's deputy executive director; Benjamin Limmer, assistant general manager of the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority; and Tim Tenne, chief operating officer of the Maryland Transit Administration, who withdrew from consideration after his job interview.

Two other finalists — Joseph

Black, a practice leader/director at Washington, D.C.-based Network Rail Consulting, and Raymond Suarez, chief operating officer of the Denton County Transportation Authority in Texas — withdrew before the interviews.

Jack Stephens, SFRTA's current executive director, is retiring at the end of the year.

Abrams' appointment seemed in jeopardy at first as board members discussed his nomination.

"I feel like the agency ... needs some strong management right now," said former state Sen. Jim Scott, a Fort Lauderdale lawyer, who preferred Giulietti.

Broward County Commissioner Tim Ryan was dismayed that so many applicants dropped out, including Tenne, "who hit it out of the park" in his interview.

"It just gave me a sense that there's something else going on that I haven't figured out in this whole interview process," said Ryan, whose second choice was Limmer.

But Miami-Dade County Commissioner Esteban Bovo, who succeeded Abrams as chair and supported his candidacy, said all the applicants had good points and flaws.

"We need a person, in my opinion, that can navigate the politics of the three counties, and that's not an easy thing to do," Bovo said. "We need somebody that's going to be able to go to Tallahassee, to the federal government. We need somebody that's going to be able to exploit relationships and needs to do it immediately, the moment they hit the ground running."

"There's no learning curve here, and that, by definition, perhaps may disqualify a few."

The Nov. 6 general election will decide who succeeds term-limited Abrams on the Palm Beach County Commission. Running are Democrat Robert Weinroth, a former deputy mayor of Boca Raton, and Republican William "Billy" Vale, a pharmaceutical representative and political newcomer. The district covers coastal communities in the southeast portion of the county.

"The timing works pretty well," said Abrams, who still has to negotiate his salary with SFRTA. Stephens is paid $260,000 a year.

Abrams, 60, is finishing his ninth year as a county commissioner and sat on the Boca Raton City Council as a member and mayor for 17 years. ★

Volunteers, memories sought for 25th year of 100-foot tree

By Jane Smith

The 100-foot Christmas tree went up before Halloween this year, but it's the same time as last year, said Stephanie Immelman of Grapevine Communications, LLC, the firm in charge of the tree.

Last year, Delray Beach purchased the new tree to replace the rusted structure that annually needed repair and moved the tree location to the east side of the Old School Square grounds.

"We wanted to make sure we had enough time to put it up," Immelman said.

The tree-construction contractor, Christmas Designers Inc., finished its work in mid-October and will return in early November to build the ice skating rink and fill in the branches, she said.

The city needs volunteers to help assemble the holiday gift shop inside the tree and the interiors of the other gift shops nearby. Volunteers can sign up for shifts during the weeks of Nov. 5 and Nov. 12.

"We will start at 9 a.m. and go to 2 p.m. from Monday through Friday," Immelman said.

Volunteers can sign up by emailing Tiffany Mazer, the tree's "volunteer whisperer" and operations manager, at tmazer@delraybeach.com. Lunch will be provided each day.

This year marks the 25th anniversary of the 100-foot tree in Delray Beach.

"We are asking people to tell their tree stories," Immelman said.

Anyone with tree tales can contact Mazer via email and type "tree memories" in the subject line. Photos are welcome. The deadline is Nov. 15.

Entries will be posted on a special website created for the tree, www.100ftchristmastree.com, and on the tree's Facebook page.

The 100-foot tree lighting will be Nov. 29, the Thursday after Thanksgiving. Festivities begin at 5 p.m. Santa will light the tree at 7:15 p.m. and will stay around for photos after the tree lighting.

The event is free; nearby activities such as ice skating and the carousel rides have a nominal charge. ★

Ocean Ridge

Town weighs tougher rules for development drainage

By Dan Moffett

Confronted with threats posed by rising seas and overly aggressive builders, Ocean Ridge commissioners are grappling with tough decisions about how much to tighten the town's building rules.

At their Nov. 5 meeting, the commissioners will have to decide between two competing ordinance proposals that would set minimum drainage standards for lots under development.

One proposal requires developers to set aside 35 percent of their lots for pervious, or drainable, materials such as landscaping. The other proposal would also impose the 35 percent standard, up from the current 25 percent, but would carve out an exemption for smaller lots, those less than 12,000 square feet.

The commission appears divided on which rule to approve.

Mayor James Bonfiglio and Commissioners Steve Coz and Philip Besler say they are concerned about the possible hardship on homeowners with smaller lots and are considering supporting the exemption. Vice Mayor Don MaGruder and Commissioner Kristine de Haseth favor the blanket 35 percent approach, arguing Ocean Ridge needs to fall in line with neighboring communities that have stronger requirements.

The town's Planning and Zoning Commission, on a 4-1 vote, recommended the 35 percent ordinance without exemptions, as did the town's engineer, Lisa Tropepe, and outside planning consultant, Marty Minor of Urban Design Kilday Studios in West Palm Beach.

Mark Marsh, an architect who serves on the P&Z board, told the commission during a special meeting Oct. 15 that the stricter limit wasn't innovative or unreasonable.

"It's nothing out of the norm," Marsh said. "We're trying to catch up with other communities."

Marsh said Manalapan already has the 35 percent standard, and Gulf Stream and Palm Beach are at 40 percent. He told commissioners that Ocean Ridge was under siege by builders who want to maximize profits.

"The whole goal is to preserve the ambience of this town," Marsh said.

Tropepe told the commission that exceptions to the tougher standard would diminish the town's ability to handle storm water and rising seas. She said the town needs more swales and green space — not more concrete, asphalt and brick.

"Any increase in impervious area compromises our stormwater drainage," Tropepe said.

Bonfiglio said he thought residents should have one more chance to weigh in on the issue at the November meeting when both versions of the ordinance come up for a second reading and final approval. Only one can become law.

In May, the commission passed a moratorium on new construction projects in response to concerns about loopholes in the town's building code. Commissioners could lift that moratorium on Nov. 5 by approving the proposed rule changes.

In other business, at the October special meeting, the commission unanimously approved the first readings of two proposed amendments to the town charter. With final approval in November, the amendments will be put on the ballot for residents to consider in the March 12 municipal election.

One amendment gives the town manager the authority to hire and fire all town employees without the commission's approval — except for terminating the police chief, a matter that must come before the commissioners.

The other amendment provides for a limit of three consecutive three-year terms for commissioners. After serving the three terms, a commissioner must wait a year before running for office again.

At the commission's regularly scheduled meeting on Oct. 1, commissioners advanced after first reading three other charter amendment proposals for the March ballot. One clarifies candidate qualifying periods and the beginning of commission terms. Another requires 24 hours' notice, instead of 12 hours', for special commission meetings and sets a three-vote minimum for approving any action. At present only a simple majority vote is required.

The third and most controversial proposed change calls for requiring a four-vote supermajority for the commission to approve increases to the allowable density or height of new developments. ★

Lantana

State ethics panel finds probable cause in sex complaint against mayor

By Mary Thurwachter

The Florida Commission on Ethics has found probable cause that Lantana Mayor David Stewart misused his position to attempt to obtain a sexual benefit for himself. Probable cause also was found to believe he solicited sex from a constituent based on an understanding his vote, official action, or judgment would be influenced.

A probable cause finding is not a determination that Stewart violated ethics laws, but that there is enough evidence of a violation to allow the investigation to proceed to a full evidentiary hearing, if Stewart chooses, said Kerrie J. Stillman, a spokesperson for the Commission on Ethics.

If that happens, the matter would go before the Division of Administrative Hearings.

Another option for Stewart would be agreeing to a settlement, the terms of which would be decided by the commission's advocate and Stewart and his legal representative.

The ethics complaint was filed in January by Lantana resident Catherine Padilla. She claims she and Stewart, 65, had become friends when both attended meetings of the Hypoluxo-Lantana Kiwanis Club.

Their relationship took an objectionable turn in 2015, according to Padilla, when, after a morning Kiwanis meeting, the two had lunch after which he drove her to a motel and propositioned her for sex. Padilla, 54, said she "wasn't interested" and that Stewart drove her back to her car.

She said Stewart called her a week or two later and said he would guarantee her street would get speed tables, a safety measure for which she had lobbied, if she would have sex with him at the motel.

Stewart, who has been mayor for 19 years, has said the accusations were totally false and that he has never asked for, or accepted, anything in exchange for a vote. After the probable cause finding was announced on Oct. 24, Stewart said it would not be appropriate for him to comment, as he had not heard officially from the Commission on Ethics about the ruling.

However, in documents filed as a response to the advocate's recommendation, Stewart denied Padilla's accusations.

Among those interviewed by the advocate this summer were friends of Padilla — David Brinkley, Kem Mason and Pastor Michael DeBehnke — who said Padilla had confided in them about her accusations. Also interviewed by the advocate was Town Manager Deborah Manzo, who said Padilla had spoken to her on Dec. 5, 2017. Manzo, according to the documents, said that Stewart "never asked nor interfered in the process of granting and/or installing the cushions [speed humps]" in Padilla's neighborhood.

In August 2015, the Town Council voted in favor of the traffic-calming speed humps for Padilla's street. Another unanimous vote to approve the speed humps came this year on Sept. 24.

Padilla filed an amendment to her first complaint on Jan. 11, when the mayor came to her house to talk to her about the complaint and she called police.

Stewart, according to the police report, told officers he had learned of the ethics complaint filed with the state and had gone to Padilla's house to talk with her about it.

Padilla, according to the police report, said that when she opened the door and saw Stewart, she shut it, locked it and took a photo of Stewart in his car before he left. The two never spoke during the incident, both told police.

Another complaint was filed by Padilla on March 27, accusing the mayor of using sexual innuendo during a Kiwanis Club dinner at the Whistle Stop Lounge on Oct. 24, 2017. Manzo was also in attendance. Padilla claimed she heard Manzo say she wasn't happy with her choice of entrees and that Stewart remarked, "You haven't tried my meat yet."

The Ethics Commission dismissed that complaint in July "due to a lack of legal sufficiency," according to a news release from the commission.

The Coastal Star attempted to reach council members regarding the probable cause ruling, but most calls were not returned. However, council member Phil Aridas said he didn't know enough about the matter to comment. ★

Zoning change denied for Old Key Lime House office space

By Mary Thurwachter

A zoning request that would allow the offices of the Old Key Lime House on Ocean Avenue to be moved next door to a historic home at 110 S. Lake Drive failed to win over the Lantana Town Council.

The home's owner, Wayne Cordero, also owns the popular waterside restaurant.

Cordero, who appeared at the Oct. 22 council meeting, said business was so good at the restaurant that more space is needed for offices and parking.

"I live in the house now, but I'm planning to move to an apartment across the street," Cordero said. "We could tear it down and use it for parking, but it's a historic house (built in the late 1800s) and I don't want to do that."

Instead, he wants to use the home for business offices, which are crammed in the restaurant. During daytime hours, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., up to 10 cars could park at the house, he said. For this to happen, the property would require a zoning change from residential to commercial.

A half dozen people spoke in support of Cordero's plan, including Dave Arm, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

"This is a no-brainer for me," Arm said. "You've got a property that is adjacent to and contiguous with existing business. They're not going to change the aspect of the property. It's a beautiful house. They'll use it for bookkeepers, so it's not like it will be a restaurant or a bar. It will add parking, which will definitely help our parking situation on Ocean Avenue."

"For the future as long as we can see, this would be used for the purpose of bookkeepers.

There wouldn't be anybody there after business hours in the evenings. It'll be quieter even than if it was a residence."

But next-door neighbor Alfred Brode, whose home was built in 1935, said he had a big objection to a zoning change. Brode said the dock behind Cordero's house intersects with his property. "If the property becomes commercial, I may have to go to an attorney," he said.

Brode said that property values would decline if the house was zoned commercial. "The historic home next to it was already torn down for a parking lot and I always thought the area should be a historic district." If Cordero's home becomes commercial, Brode said it could be sold and used for any commercial business.

"I don't think you should be encroaching on South Lake Drive with the commercial district," Brode said.

Michelle Donahue, of Hypoluxo Island, said she was a huge fan of the Old Key Lime House and a regular customer, but disagreed with the proposed zoning change.

"I have no question in my mind that Wayne Cordero and his family are going to do the right thing with that property," she said. "I would like to see them keep the house there, maintain it properly and beautify it. However, there'll be a day when the family will have to sell it and as they sell it, what does that do? What's the comprehensive plan? I'm afraid that by zoning that commercial you're opening yourself to a whole different ballgame that could change the dynamic of the center of our town."

Council members said they understood the need for more parking and office space but were concerned about what would happen to the property in the future. They were also sympathetic to the neighbor's concern about encroachment.

"We have to make a decision where to start and stop the commercial zoning, and we're at that point," council member Phil Aridas said.

Mayor Dave Stewart didn't doubt Cordero's sincerity but said "as you know, Wayne, we're not always going to be around. So we've kind of got to be statesmen and look to the future. We can't condition a piece of commercial property. Once we change it to commercial, you can have a petting zoo in there."

The council voted 5-0 to deny the request. ★

Along the Coast

Consider negative effects of Amendment 1 on revenue, leaders say

By Steve Plunkett

Municipal leaders are taking a cautious approach to the possibility that constitutional Amendment 1 will be approved on Election Day. "If it passes then local governments, which are the ones that tax by property taxes, will see a decrease in revenue. We're already estimating that if it passes it will be $1.8 million," Boca Raton Mayor Scott Singer said. "And yes, a tax cut sounds like a wonderful thing. As the League of Cities has been pointing out, this is not a tax cut, this is a tax shift," Singer continued at the Oct. 10 City Council meeting. "So please give special consideration to that."

The proposed amendment would give up to an additional $25,000 exemption to homesteads valued at $100,000 to $125,000. There already is a $25,000 exemption on the first $25,000 of assessed value and a second $25,000 exemption on the value between $50,000 and $75,000. The second and potential third exemptions do not apply to school district taxes.

In Ocean Ridge, Town Commissioner Kristine de Haseth also urged voters to educate themselves. The town would see tax revenues drop by about $75,000, while Palm Beach County government would lose $27.3 million.

De Haseth said 66 homesteads in Ocean Ridge are assessed at less than $100,000 and would not qualify for the additional exemption; 541 would be eligible for at least part of it.

"I encourage you to educate yourself on all the pieces, make sure that you know what it means to you personally and also what it means to your town," she said Oct. 1.

Florida TaxWatch urged voters to say no.

"The proposed homestead benefits relatively few Florida families (29 percent) and property owners (24 percent). It also benefits only 57 percent of homestead owners," the nonprofit watchdog group said. "It will likely lead to increases on everybody else, with higher taxes on lower-income homeowners and small businesses, and increased rents for renters."

Also opposing the Florida Legislature-approved proposal were the Florida League of Cities, the Florida Association of Counties and the Florida City and County Management Association.

Delray Beach passed a League of Cities-sponsored resolution as part of its Oct. 16 consent agenda urging residents "to carefully consider the potential adverse consequences of Amendment 1 before voting."

The consequences include municipalities being forced to raise property tax rates, benefits going to only a handful of homeowners, and businesses being exposed to a "much higher" tax burden, the league said.

Palm Beach County Property Appraiser Dorothy Jacks said the maximum benefit for Boca Raton homesteads assessed at $125,000 and up is $282. Depending on the municipal tax rate, the benefit would range from $200 to $300, she said.

Robert Rollins, chairman of the Greater Boca Raton Beach & Park District, said on its face, the proposal is appealing.

"As a homeowner I'd be leaning toward this," he said.

But the district, which is funded almost 100 percent by property taxes, would have to either cut services or raise its tax rate if the amendment is approved, he said.

Gulf Stream Mayor Scott Morgan was not too worried about the prospect of the third exemption.

"We're a small town. I don't think it'd be a particularly significant issue," Morgan said.

Jacks estimated the amendment would mean a loss of $35,849 for Gulf Stream.

She also predicted lost tax revenues of $40,795 in South Palm Beach, $70,129 in Lantana, $9,294 in Manalapan, $11,595 in Briny Breezes, $1.6 million in Boynton Beach, $1.6 million in Delray Beach and $153,864 in Highland Beach. ★

Lantana

Council considering options for Nature Preserve trail

By Mary Thurwachter

A year after Hurricane Irma left the trail at the Nature Preserve in shambles, the Lantana Town Council is still grappling with the best way to restore it. Only the front portion of the path is accessible.

In May, the council talked about constructing a concrete path, a $66,000 project that would be built over two years. But council members said they weren't thrilled with the idea of a concrete walkway in a nature preserve, and some thought the cost was too high. They asked Town Manager Deborah Manzo to look into other options, including one with composite wood and hand railings.

On Oct. 8, Manzo presented an estimate of $709,470 from Marlin Marine Construction for a composite wood path with handrails and pilings. Council members said that project was out of its price range.

Manzo said another option for the 6½-acre preserve at 440 E. Ocean Ave. would be to use treated wood, where the planks for the same square footage as the composite trail would be $8,279 (installation costs were not available). Council member Phil Aridas said he thought a pressure-treated wood boardwalk was the way to go, but others had different ideas.

Vice Mayor Ed Shropshire suggested pavers and said Water Tower Commons was going to have them.

Council member Malcolm Balfour said a macadam path like those at many golf courses would be far less expensive.

"Concrete, which I'm not crazy about, is far better than pavers and certainly better than $709,470," said council member Lynn Moorhouse. "Pavers move."

To cover all bases, Manzo was directed to get estimates on a path made of pressure treated wood, from pavers and on macadam.

Mayor Dave Stewart said the town, because of an agreement made when the Nature Preserve was built in the late 1990s, cannot spend any more on the property than the $50,000 annual payment it receives from the Carlisle senior living facility next door. The town's annual cost to maintain the park is about $20,000, leaving $30,000 to spend each year on needed improvements.

Manzo said some funds for the project could be carried over from this year "because we had planned on doing the smaller portion of the path in fiscal year 2018 and since we have not, we will carry those funds over and use the other funds for fiscal year 2019."

The smaller loop of the trail would be tackled the first year and the larger loop the following year, Manzo said.

Between $1,000 and $2,000 for the pathway project would come from FEMA, which supports repairs such as this as an improvement or mitigation project. ★

Delray Medical Center Achieves Prestigious Thrombectomy-Capable Stroke Center Certification by The Joint Commission

As the fifth leading cause of death in the United States, hearing the term "stroke" can often be a very scary thing. Not knowing immediately where to turn, or which medical center is capable of providing life-saving care can be even more frightening. When it comes to stroke, time is brain. Where you are treated and how fast you receive treatment makes a difference. Nearly 88% of strokes are caused by a blood clot that cuts off blood flow to the brain. These ischemic strokes are largely treatable if a patient gets to a hospital that can provide the right treatment in time. Fortunately, that hospital is right in

"In this, we have been able to show that our process quality is superior to most hospitals, if not all hospitals here in the Palm Beaches... We are, in many ways, defining how stroke treatment has improved nationally."

Regional Neuroscience Director

your neighborhood. Delray Medical Center, one of the area's few Comprehensive Stroke Centers, is the only hospital in Palm Beach County to earn the Thrombectomy-Capable Stroke Center certification from The Joint Commission in collaboration with the American Heart Association/American Stroke Association.

This certification, one of many that Delray Medical Center has achieved over the years, signifies that the hospital has met rigorous standards that include experience in performing mechanical endovascular thrombectomy (EVT), a specialized surgical procedure used to remove blood clots from the brain during ischemic stroke cases; the capability to provide EVT 24 hours a day, seven days a week; and the hospital's primary neuro-interventionalists, the physicians who routinely perform emergency mechanical thrombectomy, also must meet the highest standards of subspecialty training.

When asked about all that goes into becoming certified, Stroke Director, Dr. Scott Blumenthal explained that "Hospitals that become Thrombectomy-Capable Stroke Centers must meet rigorous standards. In order to achieve this certification, it takes a team including EMS, ER physicians, Nurse Practitioners, Nurses, Neurologists, Neurointensivists, Radiologists and Neuro-interventionalists, to work together in a rapid manner." Over time, we have been able to dramatically reduce the time to receive TPA or EVT. He went on to add that "Stroke Centers who have more efficient, streamlined protocols will have better outcomes." He went on to explain that communication plays a major role. Early notification of a likely stroke victim is relayed to all members of the team at Delray Medical which helps to expedite emergent interventional treatment for the patient. For every minute that a stroke goes untreated, a patient loses up to 1.9 million neurons.

Edward C. Jauch, MD, chair of the American Heart Association/American Stroke Association's Hospital Accreditation Stroke Subcommittee, highlighted the importance of receiving a certification such as this, and commented that "With the recent advances in endovascular therapies for acute ischemic stroke, it's important to recognize hospitals which can perform this critical intervention safely and effectively."

Dr. Nils Kronast Mueller, a Neuro-interventionalist and Regional Neuroscience Director at Delray Medical Center, emphasizing both the importance of the certification and the benefits of the procedure itself, explained that thrombectomy treatment has proven to be nearly three times more effective in terms of resolving disability for severe stroke than the more conventional treatments. He went on to explain that "what we do very differently here in Palm Beach, compared to the rest of the country, with this bypass of going directly to the thrombectomy-capable centers, we have shortened the time from onset to treatment dramatically." The time saved by this bypass process, rather than going to a primary center and then being transferred, can be crucial in determining a victim's recovery ability. This is largely due to the relentless efforts of the multidisciplinary team at Delray Medical Center and their ability to provide an elite level of treatment to every single case that comes through the door.

Commission modifies rules in central business district

Incentive program planned to retain building heights

By Jane Smith

Some rule changes are coming to downtown Delray Beach after city commissioners finished a required review of the central business district's land development regulations.

The rules regarding height, architectural styles and open spaces, passed in February 2015, mandated a three-year review to make sure the regulations worked to "shape the desired downtown environment."

In addition, at the Oct. 9 city workshop meeting, commissioners directed staff to create an incentive program to

How rules define central business district

Revised rules cover four subdistricts:

- The central core, consisting of East Atlantic Avenue between Swinton Avenue and Intracoastal Waterway, Pineapple Grove neighborhood to Northeast Fourth Street and Federal Highway between George Bush Boulevard on the north and Southeast Fourth Street on the south.
- The beach, made up of East Atlantic between the Intracoastal and A1A.
- The West Atlantic neighborhoods, between West 12th and West Third avenues.
- The railroad corridors, along the FEC tracks from Northeast Second to Northeast Fourth streets and Southeast Second to nearly Southeast Seventh streets.

keep property owners satisfied with the current one- and two-story building heights and to eliminate the pay-for-offsite-parking program that exists in the downtown, generally along East Atlantic Avenue between Swinton Avenue and the Intracoastal Waterway.

The incentive program, known as a transfer of development rights, might encourage East Atlantic Avenue property owners to hold onto their one- and two-story buildings instead of selling to a developer who might desire to build to the allowed three-story height.

City Planner Anthea Gianniotis said it's best to allow the private market to determine the value of each story. Then, a developer who wants extra stories or more density in another area would make a deal with an Atlantic Avenue property owner, paying for the extra story.

As a result, the Atlantic Avenue property would remain at its current height and the developer would be able to build a taller building in another area.

The problem, commissioners and staff agree, is finding where that area exists east of the Interstate. Congress Avenue already has development incentives.

"You can offer incentives using the carrot or the stick approach," Gianniotis said.

For parking in the central core, commissioners want to eliminate the pay-for-extra-spaces program, called in-lieu parking. Restaurants have the highest parking requirement per square feet of all uses in the city. Retail is second highest, followed by residential.

"Parking is a policy choice, not a technical issue," said Tim Stillings, development services director, when talking about the pay-for-spaces program.

For newly constructed buildings, developers can buy up to 30 percent of the required spaces, he said. For those who reuse existing buildings, developers can buy all of the parking spaces needed, Stillings said.

The cost varies by the subdistrict, with central core building owners paying the highest rate at $23,600 per space.

As of early October, the city has collected $1.9 million in these fees since 1993, when the in-lieu program started, Stillings said. That amount is well below the cost of building a new garage where spaces would cost between $25,000 to $35,000 each, he said.

The fee might be too low, if it's paid only once, Mayor Shelly Petrolia said. "Maybe it should be an annual fee?" she said.

Petrolia also suggested the library surface lot as a possible parking garage site, because it already has the footings needed to support the building.

Also under the revised rules, which won't require another review, owners of office buildings and hotels can now have enclosed and air-conditioned amenities on their roofs for guests, renters and walk-in users to enjoy.

Menin Co., which is developing the Ray hotel in Pineapple Grove, sought to define the percentage of the rooftop that can be enclosed and air-conditioned. Vice President Marc Yavinsky suggested 25 percent at the Sept. 25 commission meeting, saying the Ray's rooftop kitchen needs to be enclosed to avoid outdoor cooking fires.

Planning staff agreed and the 25 percent figure made it into the revision.

But, at the Oct. 16 meeting, commissioners expressed concerns about light and noise pollution from rooftop uses affecting nearby condo residents. They decided to ban live bands and DJs on the roofs. Commissioners also limited the rooftop lounge hours to 10 p.m. from Sundays through Thursdays and 11 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays.

In addition, they agreed to allow outdoor dining and other outside uses in the railroad corridors, increased the required amount of green space in proportion to the building size to break up the long buildings and limited the number of financial institutions that can occupy the first floor along Atlantic Avenue and Pineapple Grove Way (Northeast Second Avenue). ★ sunrise over the ocean,” Judy said. “What could be better than that? Then I walk back there to the lagoon. It’s a magical place.”

The waters are a little darker, more brackish now than upon her first arrival a half-century ago, but Hollnagel still finds plenty of magic in the lagoon: manatees mating, manta rays patrolling the docks, mullet thrashing across the surface and an Audubon guidebook’s worth of wetland birds taking it all in from above.

The human species is on display by the lagoon, too — neighbors grilling fish for neighbors, and grandparents teaching their grandchildren how to catch dinner or how to keep a kayak from going sideways.

Last spring, Wellington Arms residents marked the community’s 50th anniversary with a lively get-together by the swimming pool overlooking the lagoon. Stories about their long shared history gave way to worries about an uncertain future.

Four years ago, William Swaim, of Waterfront ICW Properties in Delray Beach, came forward with a plan to fill in submerged land he owns adjacent to their properties and under the Wellington Arms boat docks. In a suit filed against homeowners along the lagoon, he’s demanded they remove their docks or agree to a deal to pay him for their use. Part of the deal would include ending their opposition to his development plans and retracting public objections they’ve made to state officials — especially environmental objections.

Swaim also has taken the town of Ocean Ridge to court, asserting the right to an easement for a road next to the Town Hall to gain access to his land. In September, Swaim applied for a permit with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, seeking permission to truck in fill material to the 3.34-acre site and begin building three single-family houses.

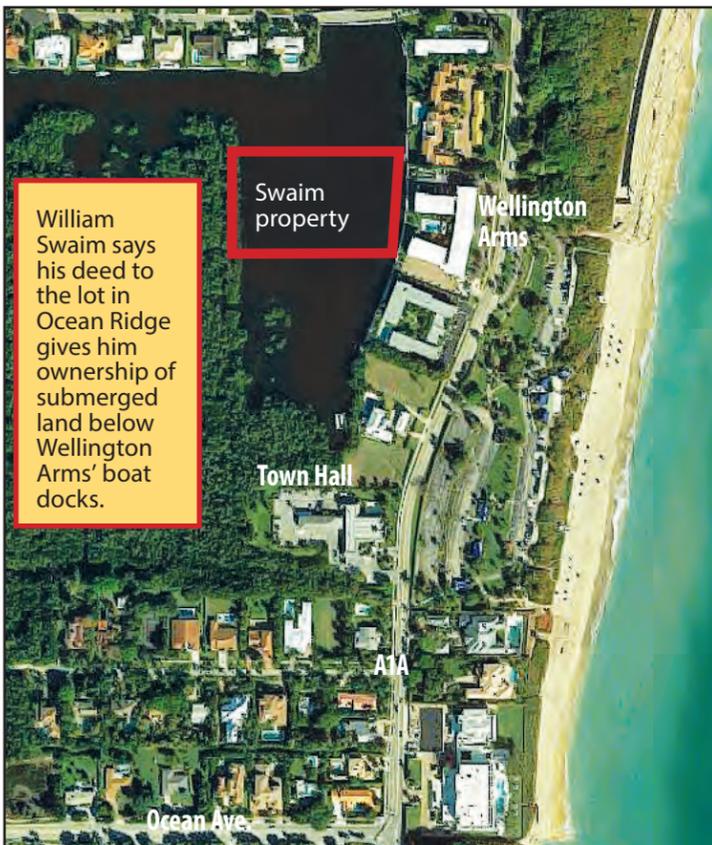

A decision on the permit request likely is months away. Ocean Ridge officials and residents along the lagoon have been vocal in their opposition to the permit application and development plan.

“Without a doubt, we will be pointing out all of the issues with Mr. Swaim trying to do something back there,” Town Attorney Brian Shutt said during an October commission meeting. “There are things we can point out to the Army Corps.”

Said Mayor James Bonfiglio: “We will do everything that’s required to voice the objections. ... We’ll do everything we can to help residents end the problem.”

Residents pleaded with officials to do more.

“We need your help,”

Staff Graphic/Google Map image

Wellington Arms resident Phil Lambrechts told the Town Commission. “We need to get this ended.”

Lambrechts said residents along the lagoon have spent some $700,000 in legal fees fighting the plan, and most of that came from the condominium owners.

“Our community spent almost three-quarters of a million dollars now on lawsuits in the last three years,” Wellington Arms resident Jay Magee told commissioners. “And we’re just a small community. It’s a hardship for a lot of the owners.”

The legal fight centers on whether the lagoon is a naturally occurring waterway that deserves preservation or rather a manmade creation that does not. Swaim’s attorneys have argued the latter, saying bulldozers and dredges carved the lagoon out decades ago to create a mosquito control area.

Environmental groups have joined the town’s homeowners in rejecting that assertion, arguing the lagoon is an irreplaceable natural treasure.

The courts have appeared to be leaning both ways so far. In 2015, an administrative law judge in Tallahassee sided with South Florida Water Management District attorneys and cited environmental concerns and potential impediments to boaters as reasons for denying Swaim’s requests. In 2017, a mediation judge issued a judgment opinion that appeared to support Swaim, concluding parts of the lagoon were created by human activity and potentially not protected as sovereign state land.

“We lost and it’s devastating to the town,” condo resident Pat Ganley told commissioners after last year’s court hearing. “We need you to help. So fight it.”

Ocean Ridge is not alone when it comes to disputes with Swaim over submerged land. Two years ago, he sued the State of Florida and five fiber optic companies claiming they are trespassing on 2.5 acres he bought in the Intracoastal north of Lake Wyman in Boca Raton. Swaim accuses the state of wrongly allowing the companies easements. He wants the firms to pull out their cables and pay him damages.

Swaim also irked town of Palm Beach officials two years ago when he petitioned the Corps for permission to fill in some three acres of Intracoastal land he was considering buying about three-quarters of a mile south of the Lake Worth Bridge. The Corps has not issued a decision.

Residents stick together

In their condominium’s 50th year, residents say they are committed to protecting their community and are as close to each other as ever.

Her friend Nadine Magee, Jay’s wife, put it this way: “It’s like ... cooking someone else’s Thanksgiving turkey in your oven because it’s bigger and better. That’s literally the way people are here.”

Without the iconic lagoon, Wellington Arms wouldn’t be what it has been for five decades and Florida would lose forever another little piece of itself.

“It’d be a shame to see anything else out there but the manatees, the birds and the fish,” said Connie Sophie, an avid kayaker. “It means a lot to me.”

Manalapan

Commission again rejects Publix pitch to add liquor store

By Dan Moffett

For the third time, Publix tried to persuade the Manalapan Town Commission to allow a free-standing wine and liquor store near the company's new supermarket in Plaza del Mar.

And for a third time, commissioners politely said thank you for your service, but no.

"You're offering a convenience, but the community is telling us they don't want that convenience," Mayor Keith Waters said during the commission meeting on Oct. 23. "The feedback has not been positive."

The opposition again was largely focused on the proposed liquor store's proximity to the beach — roughly 200 yards. Commissioners worried that students on spring break would find it too easy to abuse alcohol and party in places and ways they shouldn't.

"I'm worried about underage drinking," said Vice Mayor Peter Isaac. "We could be enabling binge drinking at the beach."

Commissioner Clark Appleby said even a "high-end liquor store" would be likely to "invite a certain crowd" that would cause problems for police and residents.

Mark Klein, general manager of the Eau Palm Beach Resort and Spa, told the commission that a carryout liquor store would hurt the hotel's business. Klein said that, though the Eau serves alcohol in its bars and restaurant, the drinking occurs in a controlled environment.

"No doubt that hard liquor does encourage poor decision-making," Klein said. "However, every one of our service staff is trained to recognize potential overindulgence and poor behavior. We do have controls."

The commission voted 6-1 against Publix, with Commissioner Hank Siemon siding with the company. Waters did not have a vote.

"I don't see the moral hazard and health concern," Siemon said. "We have a history with Publix. We know what they do and they do it very well. Publix is a good neighbor, and I think they would handle it very well."

Matt Buehler, a retail vice president with plaza landlords Kitson & Partners, told the commission that Publix's request for a separate liquor store was necessitated by a Florida law that prohibits selling hard liquor inside supermarkets. Only beer and wine are allowed in the main store.

"There has to be separation," he said. "This is a retail package store. It is not a bar."

Buehler promised the commission that the liquor store would be "an extension of the Publix retail store" and run as efficiently as the grocery operation, with a security guard on site.

But commissioners, as they have said repeatedly over the last two years, were steadfast against the idea.

"It diminishes the value of the property in the neighborhood," Mayor Pro Tem Simone Bonutti said. "I'm looking at the public health and safety of our kids, too."

When the original plans for building the Publix first came to town officials over two years ago, a liquor store some 30 feet west of the supermarket was included. But the company, faced with opposition, pulled the store from the site plan before the project got underway. Last March, with the supermarket's grand opening nearing, Publix again brought the liquor store issue to the commission, and commissioners voted it down as they did in October.

Twenty years ago, Publix stayed out of the liquor business.

But as competition within the supermarket industry intensified and grew even more cutthroat, the company has gradually changed course. Over the last decade, Publix has acquired or built more than 100 liquor stores throughout the Southeast as a way to maximize profits.

According to industry analysts and the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States, a liquor store can generate more than twice the profit margin per square foot as its companion supermarket next door.

Waters said he would not be surprised if the company keeps trying.

"I have a sneaking suspicion we're going to see this again," the mayor said. "I would hope logic would tell you that to move forward would be moving forward against the wishes of the community."★

Differing priorities in District 89 race for state House

By Steve Plunkett

The race for District 89 in the Florida House may well come down to which party gets more voters to the polls Nov. 6.

The ballot features two barrier island residents: Ocean Ridge Mayor and lawyer Jim Bonfiglio, the Democrat, and Delray Beach accountant Mike Caruso, the Republican.

The Aug. 28 primaries were close, party-wise, with 12,437 Democrats casting ballots compared with 12,028 Republicans. District 89, which typically leans Republican, stretches along the coast from Boca Raton to Singer Island.

A third candidate, business owner Deborah Wesson Gibson, a Delray Beach mainlander, was not affiliated with a party and dropped out of the race in August.

In a letter to the state Division of Elections, Gibson, 55, said she was withdrawing to not peel off votes from the Democrat in the race. "It is not my intent to split the party's votes and effectively lend a hand to whoever wins the Republican primary," she said.

Bonfiglio, 65, who has campaigned on making life "easier, safer and better," has been on the Ocean Ridge Town Commission since 2014 following 14 years on its Planning and Zoning Commission. He had $84,258 in campaign contributions through Oct. 19, the latest numbers available. He also lent his campaign $270,000 and added $5,368 in in-kind donations.

Bonfiglio, who was named mayor by his fellow commissioners in March, received only $2,003 from six donors with Ocean Ridge addresses. He had $311,975 in expenses and $47,651 cash on hand.

Caruso, 60, a forensic CPA who qualified to run for the House by collecting 1,241 signatures, says he will bring "real, experienced, community-based leadership" to the state Capitol. He has been a member of the Delray Beach Police Advisory Board and president of his homeowners association. As of Oct. 19 he had collected $227,787 in contributions, lent his campaign $204,125 in cash and given $304 in kind. His 51 donors with Delray Beach addresses contributed $25,662. Caruso's expenses were $374,212 and he had $58,004 cash on hand.

Caruso, a self-described fiscal conservative, says now is not the time to raise taxes. "Instead we need to allow [everyday Floridians] to keep more of their money in their own pockets to help continue to fuel our robust Florida economy," Caruso told the League of Women Voters.

Bonfiglio says the state needs to find more equitable and reliable revenue streams.

"I support 1) legalizing and taxing recreational marijuana, 2) legalizing and taxing sports betting, 3) look more to corporations, LLCs and businesses to pay their fair share for the costs of government based on their revenue and degree they draw from our education system and use/over-use our infrastructure and threaten our environment, 4) claw back some of the tax breaks given to large businesses and corporations, especially the most recent federal income tax breaks," he told the league.

Caruso has the endorsements of Boca Raton Deputy Mayor Jeremy Rodgers, departing District 89 state Rep. Bill Hager, the Boca Raton Chamber of Commerce and the county firefighters union.

Bonfiglio is endorsed by U.S. Rep. Lois Frankel, Boynton Beach City Commissioner Justin Katz and School Board member Frank Barbieri, as well as the county Classroom Teachers Association.

Hager, who first won the District 89 seat in 2012, is leaving office because of term limits. ★

With the outer structure complete on the 3550 condo in South Palm Beach, the Town Council's only recourse may be to fine the developer if the town determines that the building violates rules on height. Jerry Lower/The Coastal Star to the original plans.

Jordan claims the building has grown to a height of about 106 feet from ground level, roughly 20 feet above what she says the council was expecting. Part of the increase is due to a foundation with a starting point above those of surrounding buildings — 7.6 feet higher — that is mandated by flood plain requirements. A 21-foot garage space and a roof with elevator shafts and stair towers account for more of the total additional height, officials say.

In response to Jordan's complaints, Town Manager Mo Thornton inspected the building in mid-October with Hector Garcia, the project's architect, and Mike Crisafulle, the town's building official. Thornton said they measured the six floors of living quarters and together the height of those six stories was slightly less than 60 feet. She said they were unable to measure the equipment on the rooftop, however. Some of the roof structures are roughly 15 feet tall.

Jordan has complained that the structures on the roof were not part of the developer's original plans.

Thornton said, based at least on the floor-to-ceiling measurements, the building complies with the town's code.

"It's built according to the approved plans," she said.

Mayor Bonnie Fischer said the council will discuss Thornton's measurements at the Nov. 13 town meeting and decide whether more double-checking is needed. Jordan wants to have the entire building surveyed from the ground up, but other council members have balked at spending several thousand dollars to measure a building that's essentially already built.

Council members Elvadienne Culbertson and Bill LeRoy have questioned what remedy the town has to address the issues at this late date — now that the outer structure is built and developers are aiming toward a grand opening next summer.

"I'm still trying to understand," Culbertson said. "What do we do about it?"

"We're pretty much stuck with the building," Jordan said, "unless we want them to tear off the top floor."

She told the council it's important, however, that the project's changes go on the record, and if violations of town rules occur, then fining the developer is an option.

"I don't think it's wise to allow people to get away with so much without proper notification from the town," Jordan said during the council meeting on Oct. 9. "This needs to be documented."

With 30 luxury units priced between $3 million and $7 million, the 3550 project offers opulence unlike anything South Palm Beach has seen, appealing to affluent buyers from an international market and promising a huge boost to the town's tax base.

Among the amenities are concierge service, a dog park and VIP access to the Eau Palm Beach Resort and Spa.

In October, DDG announced it was also offering buyers private jet service on demand. The developer has contracted with Star Jets International to provide 24-hour jet travel, with planes capable of leaving the runway within hours of request. ★

Tax collector praises ordinance forcing Airbnb renters to pay their share of taxes

By Mary Hladky

Palm Beach County Tax Collector Anne Gannon has prevailed in her long battle to ensure vacation rental hosts pay the 6 percent tourist development tax to the county.

The Palm Beach County Commission on Oct. 16

unanimously passed an ordinance that requires vacation rental platforms to collect and remit to the county the so-called bed tax that hotels and other short-term rentals are required to pay.

"We need more tools in our toolbox to enforce our bed tax," Gannon told commissioners.

Vacation rentals are a $36 billion industry in the U.S. and growing rapidly. Airbnb, one of the best-known companies, had 2,300 hosts in Palm Beach County last year.

Gannon has long contended the county is not getting all the bed tax revenue it is owed because vacation rental hosts either do not know they are supposed to pay or simply don't want to.

The ordinance adds to rules already in place that require hosts to pay the bed tax. But now, vacation rental platforms will have to take on the burden of making sure that happens.

The platforms must verify that vacation rentals are registered with the Tax Collector's Office and have a business tax receipt and a tourist development tax account before they can list the rentals on their platforms.

They also will have to file monthly reports with the tax collector that include the names of all hosts, each vacation rental's location, and number of nights rented and amount paid for each stay.

Any platform or booking service that violates the rules faces civil penalties of up to $500 per unit per day.

Although the ordinance applies to all hosting platforms and booking services, much of the focus has been on Airbnb because of its strong resistance.

"We don't need this shakedown-style ordinance," Airbnb's Florida policy director Tom Martinelli told commissioners on Sept. 18.

"This Tax Collector's Office has been particularly hostile to this industry in her public commentary," he added.

Martinelli asked commissioners at that meeting to reject the ordinance or postpone voting on it until after the resolution of a 2014 lawsuit Gannon filed that alleged Airbnb, HomeAway, TripAdvisor and CouchSurfing International have not paid the bed taxes.

Any resolution doesn't look likely to happen soon. Both sides will argue motions for summary judgment on Nov. 27 before Circuit Judge James Nutt. Gannon, who has vowed not to settle the case, has said it will go to trial.

Martinelli wants Gannon to enter into an agreement with Airbnb under which the company will collect the bed taxes and remit them to the county. Airbnb has reached such agreements with 39 Florida counties, including earlier this year with Miami-Dade and Broward counties. Both counties at the time said they would seek similar deals with other home-sharing platforms.

Airbnb reached an agreement with the state Department of Revenue in 2015 in which the company collects state sales tax from its Florida hosts and pays the state. The same year, it began reaching agreements with counties on the bed tax collections.

But Gannon won't sign on. The problem, she has said, is that the agreements don't require Airbnb to release any information about hosts or property addresses and don't require payment of previous uncollected taxes.

Without host and property location information, Gannon said she can't do an audit to see if Airbnb is paying all it owes.

"They give us a take-it-or-leave-it agreement," Orfelia Mayor, Gannon's general counsel, said at the September commission meeting. "It is take our word for it. This is what we owe you."

Mayor raised another complaint at the October meeting, saying Airbnb has staged "a huge campaign of misinformation," wrongly telling hosts that the ordinance would impose a new tax.

Vacation rental hosts attending the meeting said they were not trying to evade taxes.

Maria Vale was one of several hosts who thought Airbnb collected the bed tax.

"We thought Airbnb took care of everything," she said.

Many said they did not understand what the county requires of them. Some had scoured the internet for information but could not find where the rules were spelled out.

One problem, it turned out, was that the information is not included on the county's website. Instead, hosts need to look at the tax collector's site, pbctax.com.

Speakers generally said they were in favor of the ordinance. But some said the county's system is confusing and cumbersome, and asked for it to be simplified.

Mayor said that is, in part, what the ordinance will do by requiring platforms to tell hosts what the requirements are.

"It puts it all in one streamlined ordinance ... so anyone knows how to stay in compliance," she said.

But she agreed that the information should be included on the county's website and that the tax collector's site should be made "more robust."

No officials from vacation rental platforms spoke at the meeting. But afterward, Airbnb released a statement saying the ordinance violates federal and state law by divulging private information about hosts. Mayor has disputed that and said Airbnb has not prevailed on that claim in any legal case.

"We will consider all options to protect the privacy and property rights of our Floridian hosts," the statement said. ★

Jurors can be told Lucibella's age, judge rules

By Steve Plunkett

Defense attorneys for onetime Ocean Ridge Vice Mayor Richard Lucibella will be able to tell jurors in his January felony trial that he is 65 years old.

Judge Daliah Weiss on Oct. 12 denied prosecutor Danielle Grundt's motion to bar any references to Lucibella's age. "Any such reference would only serve to inflame the jury and suggest [an] improper basis for its verdict," Grundt unsuccessfully argued.

Weiss granted Grundt's request to not allow expert witnesses to testify on legal standards for probable cause, but reserved her rulings until the trial on requests to limit expert testimony that critiques the police investigation or focuses on an issue that is "within the realm of a common layperson's understanding."

She also reserved rulings on whether the defense can argue the search of Lucibella's home was unlawful or the arrest was invalid.

Lucibella is charged with battery on an Ocean Ridge police officer and resisting arrest with violence, both felonies, and a misdemeanor count of using a firearm while intoxicated. The charges are punishable by up to 10 years in prison. He has pleaded not guilty.

The trial is scheduled to open Jan. 28.

Meanwhile, the insurance company lawyers representing Lucibella in a related civil lawsuit withdrew from the case Oct. 10, citing "irreconcilable differences." Nubia Plesnik, one of the arresting officers, is suing Lucibella for battery and negligence during the course of the arrest.

Lucibella, who has a $10 million umbrella liability policy, is chief executive of a multimillion-dollar Medicare shared savings group and publishes a magazine for gun aficionados.

Plesnik's lawyer filed notice of a "proposal for settlement" of the lawsuit on Aug. 31. Lucibella's lawyers filed their motion to withdraw two weeks later.

Police went to the backyard of Lucibella's beachfront home Oct. 22, 2016, after neighbors reported hearing gunshots. He resigned from the Town Commission that December. ★

It's been 8 years since an overwhelming 72% of voters demanded a fully funded Independent Inspector General. Over the years, 13 cities opposed funding the IG, including Boca Raton. The Cities and the County are starving the watchdog!

I strongly advocate for a fully funded Independent Inspector General whose main responsibility is to protect our tax dollars from waste, fraud, abuse, and corruption. Following the successful Miami Dade model, funding would be provided by a 1/4 of 1% vendor contract fee - not the taxpayers.

to Boca Raton four years ago. He now is vice chairman of the Boca Raton Airport Authority board.

This year Pollack became president of the Boca Raton-based nonprofit Vets Helping Heroes, which provides trained service dogs at no cost to active duty military members and veterans who are physically or psychologically injured.

Pollack, 76, has been active with the group since it was founded in 2007. He took on the role of president after the January death of his predecessor, Irwin Stovroff, a World War II veteran who spent 13 months in a Nazi POW camp after his plane was shot down.

"When you see what these service dogs do to improve the quality of life for the veteran, it can bring tears to your eyes," Pollack said.

The organization is badly needed because "there is no federal program that will provide service dogs," he said.

Their training is expensive. It totals $15,000 for a post-traumatic stress disorder dog, and $60,000 for a guide dog for the visually impaired, Pollack said.

Vets Helping Heroes has raised more than $7 million and placed more than 300 trained dogs. Donations have come from all over the country, he said, and 92 percent of the money is spent on dog training.

As president, Pollack wants the all-volunteer board of directors to take a more active treatment of the POWs was "brutal," he said.

"Our captors thought we had all the secrets of the American military," he said. "They didn't realize once we hit the ground, our war was over."

He and the other POWs had no knowledge of future intended targets or new policy and tactics, he said.

Food was minimal. Medical attention was almost nonexistent. Pollack lost 35 pounds.

"They kept us alive because we were their ransom for the future," he said. "We were worth something."

Their isolation was near total. They rarely left their cells, which usually housed four men, and the only outside "news" they heard came from two radio propaganda broadcasts each day.

To stave off madness, Pollack said, he thought about his life over and over again and talked to the other men.

role in the organization, and he is working to increase grant requests and expand public relations outreach nationwide to boost the amount of money Vets Helping Heroes raises.

"Our goal is to keep growing," he said. "We haven't put a percentage on it. We want to provide dogs to as many disabled veterans as we can."

They created clandestine communication systems to talk with prisoners in other cells. When these were discovered, punishment was swift and harsh. "We all have the mental and physical scars to show for it," he said.

One system was to wrap a metal drinking cup in a towel to muffle sound and put the cup against the brick wall. A prisoner in an adjoining cell would do the same, allowing the two to hear each other. That was how he first communicated with McCain.

"We talked about everything, your life, personal aspirations," he said.

More recent POWs would tell about the status of the war, news from outside and what was happening in the United States.

Word eventually spread that McCain's father was a four-star Navy admiral.

Even so, "he was just John. He was just another guy trying to survive," Pollack said.

The two came to know each other "pretty intimately."

He and the other men knew McCain, then a 31-year-old lieutenant commander captured on Oct. 26, 1967, and badly injured, had refused an offer of early release. Many of the other POWs got the same offer, including Pollack, and also refused, he said.

"The only reason they offered the release was for propaganda value," he said. McCain "would not play their game. As battered and wounded as he was, that was a very strong thing to do."

In exchange for early release, interrogators wanted the POW to sign a letter admitting to committing war crimes and asking the people of North Vietnam for forgiveness.

"I told my interrogator, I am sorry I cannot do that," Pollack said. "We had to uphold the code of conduct."

Pollack finally met McCain face-to-face just prior to his release on March 4, 1973, after they were told the war was over and their captors let them out into a courtyard. McCain was released 10 days later.

"He once made a comment to me that my humor helped save his life," he said. "That was very touching."

The two men stayed in touch through reunions of members of the NAM-POWs veterans organization, and when Pollack would visit Washington, D.C. The last time they saw each other was in 2016, when McCain was in Boca Raton for a fundraising event for his U.S. Senate re-election campaign and they spent an evening together.

McCain's funeral services amazed Pollack. He described them as "a week that outdid any president or head of state or royalty."

"He deserved it," Pollack said. "And it shows how much this country is looking for leadership today." ★

MEET YOUR NEIGHBOR: Patty Jones

Patty Jones was in her 20s when her father suffered an aneurysm at the age of 44 and went on disability.

"He was in rehab for two years, but luckily he had myself and other family, and we banded together to take care of him and pay his bills," said Jones, who lives in coastal Delray Beach. "So I totally understand how someone gets in a position where they wind up living paycheck to paycheck because of a health issue."

Three years ago, a friend invited Jones, 49, to join the board of the Palm Beach County Food Bank's Empty Bowls program when it came to Delray Beach. She accepted and will serve as chairwoman when the program hosts a fundraiser at Old School Square from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Dec. 2.

"Realizing that one in six people in our community, a lot of whom are children and senior citizens, can't afford meals, that really hits home to me," she said. "It's an event that brings awareness of the hunger in our community."

The motto of the event is "Eat simply, so others may simply eat."

For $25 in advance or $30 at the door, patrons get a picnic lunch of their choice of soup (more than 35 local restaurants will donate), bread and a cookie (donated by Old School Bakery) and water. Each customer takes a pottery bowl home as a reminder of all the empty bowls in the community. Additional bowls can be purchased.

Also available for purchase are painted pottery bowls that were created and donated by the local schools, and soup-to-go will also be for sale. Attendees will be able to support the restaurants by voting for the best soup.

All proceeds go to the PBC Food Bank.

Q: Where did you grow up and go to school? How do you think that has influenced you?

A: I grew up in Wyoming, Mich., where I attended the Godwin Heights school system all the way through high school. Wyoming was a suburb of Grand Rapids; it was a small hometown, and we played in the streets until dark and knew all the neighbors within a three-block radius. We were really raised "by the village." I learned early how to be independent and responsible from my family and my surroundings. When I moved to Florida in 1987, I attended Palm Beach Community College while I worked.

Q: What professions have you worked in? What professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

A: I worked for the same company for 16 years. The company started as Circle K, was bought by several gas companies and was Conoco Phillips when I left. I started as a clerk and worked my way up, being promoted into the office and was administrative assistant to most of the departments: HR, marketing

Q: What advice do you have for a young person seeking a career today?

A: College is a must in today's world, but take your time to find your passion.

Q: How did you choose to make your home in Delray Beach?

A: We lived on Hypoluxo Island for years, but we wanted to make it back to Delray Beach — my husband, Rod, grew up on Lake Ida — to be closer to the kids' elementary school. We found the perfect location in the Seagate area and have stayed.

Q: What is your favorite part about living in coastal Delray Beach?

A: I love the feeling of Delray Beach. It has everything you need but still has the hometown feel. You can hop on the boat just about every day of the year. We have access to the beach, plenty of restaurants and shops. Who doesn't love to drive a golf cart around town!

Q: What book are you reading now?

A: I just finished The Girl Who Takes an Eye for an Eye, by David Lagercrantz.

Q: What music do you listen to when you need inspiration? When you want to relax?

A: I like to listen to everything, from the oldies to alternative music. I enjoy listening to music and going to concerts. My favorite band at the moment is Maroon 5, which inspires me. To relax, I listen to Jewel.

Q: Do you have a favorite quote that inspires your decisions?

A: One is from Stephen King: "Get busy living or get busy dying." I'm always busy and over committing myself, but I enjoy that. I'm lucky enough to go out and do things that I love. Another one is, "Motivation comes from work, and working on things we care about," from Sheryl Sandberg. My motivation comes from things I love and that I care about. That inspires me.

Q: Have you had mentors in your life? Individuals who have inspired your life decisions?

A: My former boss, Alex Brethauer, was a big influence on me. He taught me that hard work does pay off and if you make a mistake, always be the first to admit it.

Q: If your life story were made into a movie, who would play you?

A: Michelle Pfeiffer. That comes from my sister, but she made the point that I'm quiet and I'm motivated. She also mentioned Jodie Foster; I don't look like her, but I guess I'm independent and quiet and tough. But I'd say Michelle Pfeiffer is the best one.

Trolley service returning to downtown Delray Beach

By Jane Smith

Trolley service was scheduled to return to downtown Delray Beach on Nov. 1.

The city's Community Redevelopment Agency board, made up of the city commissioners and two citizens, voted 6-1 on Oct. 22 to pay for three months of the trolley operations along Atlantic Avenue, costing about $120,000.

To allow for flexibility in the season, the contract can be extended another three months, said Jeff Costello, CRA executive director.

During that time, data on the number of trolley riders and stops will be collected to adjust the trolley schedule every 30 days. An existing app, called Transit, will be available for riders with smartphones to find out when the next trolley will stop. And trolleys may have signs that say they're free.

"Putting the trolley back into service is a Band-Aid," said Bill Bathurst, a board member and city commissioner. "It won't be one-size-fits-all with the trolley. ... But when we pulled the trolley out and the Downtowner left at the same time, it showed how weak our system is."

Both services stopped on Sept. 30.

The CRA board will meet with the Downtown Development Authority board for a Nov. 14 workshop to discuss downtown transportation. Members will talk about route changes, other sources of money to pay for the transportation services, natural gas or electric-powered vehicles and other topics related to reducing the number of vehicles downtown.

Board member Adam Frankel, who also is a city commissioner, was the lone no vote.

To ease his concern about whether the numbers provided by the trolley driver can be trusted, the DDA has some money to do a count of the riders at a particular stop, said Laura Simon, DDA executive director.

Four people spoke at the CRA meeting during public comments. All were for the trolley or some other form of downtown transportation.

Scott Roberts, general manager of the Fairfield Inn, told the CRA board members he's OK with a nominal fee to keep the trolley operating. "If my guests have to use their cars or rental cars, they go to other cities to have dinner and not Atlantic Avenue," he said.

When commercial real estate agent Christina Morrison sat on the Congress Avenue Task Force, the group wanted to supply transportation to allow workers west of the interstate to travel east to have lunch downtown, without using their cars. "Keep the trolley," she said.

"Our tourism depends on the transportation system," said Rick Konsavage, regional operations director for Ocean Properties. In Delray Beach, its holdings are the Marriott and Residence Inn hotels, Boston's and 50 Ocean restaurants, and the tiki bar called Sandbar — all on the barrier island.

In mid-October, one group that stayed at the Marriott for its annual meeting was disappointed when it arrived, Konsavage said. "They picked our site because their members would not need to rent a car. But when they got here, there was no trolley and no Downtowner," an electric vehicle ride service.

For the five properties, about 20 percent of the staff relies on the trolley to get to work, Konsavage said.

Even so, the two citizen members on the CRA board, Angie Gray and Pamela Brinson, don't think the agency should have to pay the entire bill for the trolley's operating costs.

"That's a great question for the future," said Shelly Petrolia, CRA board chairwoman and mayor. Petrolia suggested possible money sources may come from a nominal fee, advertising and the hotels. All will be discussed Nov. 14. ★

Judge will decide dispute over allowing 4 stories downtown

By Jane Smith

Delray Beach commissioners will let a judge determine whether two East Atlantic Avenue property owners have the right to build an extra floor in the three-story district.

The split vote, 3-2 against settling the $6.9 million lawsuit by carving out the contested parcels, took place in mid-October. Commissioner Ryan Boylston was concerned that chopping away at the district would lead to more lawsuits against the city.

"Every time you move that line, a new property owner is on the line," he said after the meeting. "The city attorney could not prove that this was a one-stop situation." Boylston rents space for his marketing firm in a corner building on that block.

Boylston joined Commissioner Bill Bathurst and Mayor Shelly Petrolia for letting a judge decide.

"This is the first cut, a slow and steady chipping away at something we worked hard to get," Petrolia said at the meeting.

After 18 months of meetings, a previous City Commission had capped East Atlantic's height at three stories between Swinton Avenue and the Intracoastal Waterway.

Petrolia and Commissioner Adam Frankel were part of the unanimous vote in February 2015.

City Attorney Max Lohman told commissioners that the owners of two properties had not been notified in early 2015 as required by state law. He said notices were sent out in late January to the owners. They have a year to bring a site plan for a four-story project to the city. Lohman was not the city attorney in early 2015.

One owner, William R. Burke Jr., who bought the building at 123 E. Atlantic Ave. in 1996, could not be reached for comment.

In May, Old School Bakery owner Billy Himmelrich and his business partner sued the city for $6.9 million to be able to build four stories on their parcels just east of the Old School Square cultural center. They own two parking lots and two buildings that house Tramonti and Cabana El Rey restaurants. Both restaurants have leases that expire in 2024, Himmelrich said.

Himmelrich and David Hosokawa have a history with the city and its Community Redevelopment Agency. In the mid-2000s, they sold a parcel through eminent domain to the CRA to complete the Old School Square park and in return bought a small parcel with 26 parking places. The partners lease that parcel to the CRA for parking for the Greenmarket and other events.

At the mid-October meeting, Himmelrich said, "I don't want anything special." After the meeting, he said, "I offered them a great solution and they are playing Russian roulette with the taxpayers' dollars."

Delray Beach real estate agent Brian Rosen said at the meeting that Himmelrich had helped to create the Old School Square park. "It's not setting a precedent," Rosen said.

Longtime resident Linda Oxford spoke about the height cap. "We want to be able to walk downtown and let sun hit our faces," she said.

Resident Kelly Barrette reminded the commission that when the height cap was passed in 2015, people in the chambers stood and clapped. "One of the few standing ovations," she said. Barrette also said the commissioners are "the last line of defense against inappropriate development." She urged the commission to fight the lawsuit.

Lohman, though, said settling the lawsuit was not about the merits of the case. "The settlement is about certainty," he said.

He declined to say how his office determined that only the owners of two properties had not been notified, citing the "ongoing litigation."

"The Florida Statute notice requirements do not require confirmation of receipt of notices," wrote Tim Stillings, development services director, in response to how the city tracks the notices. "When we send notices, we keep a record of the mailing labels."

"With respect to the changes to the Central Business District, the city sent notices during the consideration of the changes but did not send any immediately following the adoption."

Stillings was not employed by the city in 2015.

Longtime East Atlantic Avenue building owner Bruce Gimmy said he did not receive a notice, but he knew about the height cap because he sat on the city's Parking Management Advisory Board.

At the mid-October commission meeting, Lohman said the hearing on the city's motion to dismiss, set for Oct. 19, had been canceled based on the 3-2 vote to settle the lawsuit that took place Sept. 25.

As of press time, the hearing had not been reset.

"I'm really concerned that the city's motion to dismiss was canceled, based on the vote from one public hearing. It was a close vote," Petrolia said after the meeting. "There were a lot of questions that were not answered for us to be making major decisions." ★

Briny Breezes

Townhouse developers to answer questions in Briny

By Dan Moffett

Briny Breezes residents will get the chance to learn a lot more about plans for the Gulf Stream Views townhouse project next door when developers come to town for a question-and-answer session on Nov. 13.

The event, which is open to the public, is scheduled for 5-7 p.m. in Briny's ocean clubhouse.

Mayor Roger Bennett said he expects Ocean Ridge officials and County Pocket representatives to attend, as well as members of Briny's corporate board and the Town Council.

"I'm getting a lot of questions and comments from returning snowbirds," Bennett said during the Town Council meeting Oct. 25. "So everyone's invited."

The developers, NR Living, a division of National Realty Investment Advisors of Secaucus, N.J., plan to build 14 three-bedroom townhouse units on a roughly 2-acre site just south of Briny's boundary line, north of the County Pocket, with pre-construction prices ranging from $1.8 million to $2.7 million.

Briny Breezes Town Manager Dale Sugerman said work to prepare the site for construction has already begun, with trucks hauling in large amounts of fill to "bring the grade of the property up significantly." The developers have not yet released a work schedule for the project, Sugerman said.

In recent weeks, the Town Council has tried to clarify ownership of Briny Breezes Boulevard, a street that would provide access to the townhouses from the north off A1A. The town appears to own only a part of the 45-foot-wide right of way, Sugerman said, but it remains unclear exactly which part.

"The story gets interesting," he said of talks with Palm Beach County officials over ownership.

Sugerman says it would appear that Briny owns the northern 30 feet of the right of way and the county owns the southern 15 feet. "However, there is only 18 feet plus or minus of pavement," the manager said.

It remains unclear whether that 18 feet of pavement is under control of Briny or the county, he said, and that the county's engineering department is working to resolve the matter.

With the townhome development on the horizon, several council members have said it may benefit Briny Breezes to assume full control of the right of way, if the county is willing to give up its share.

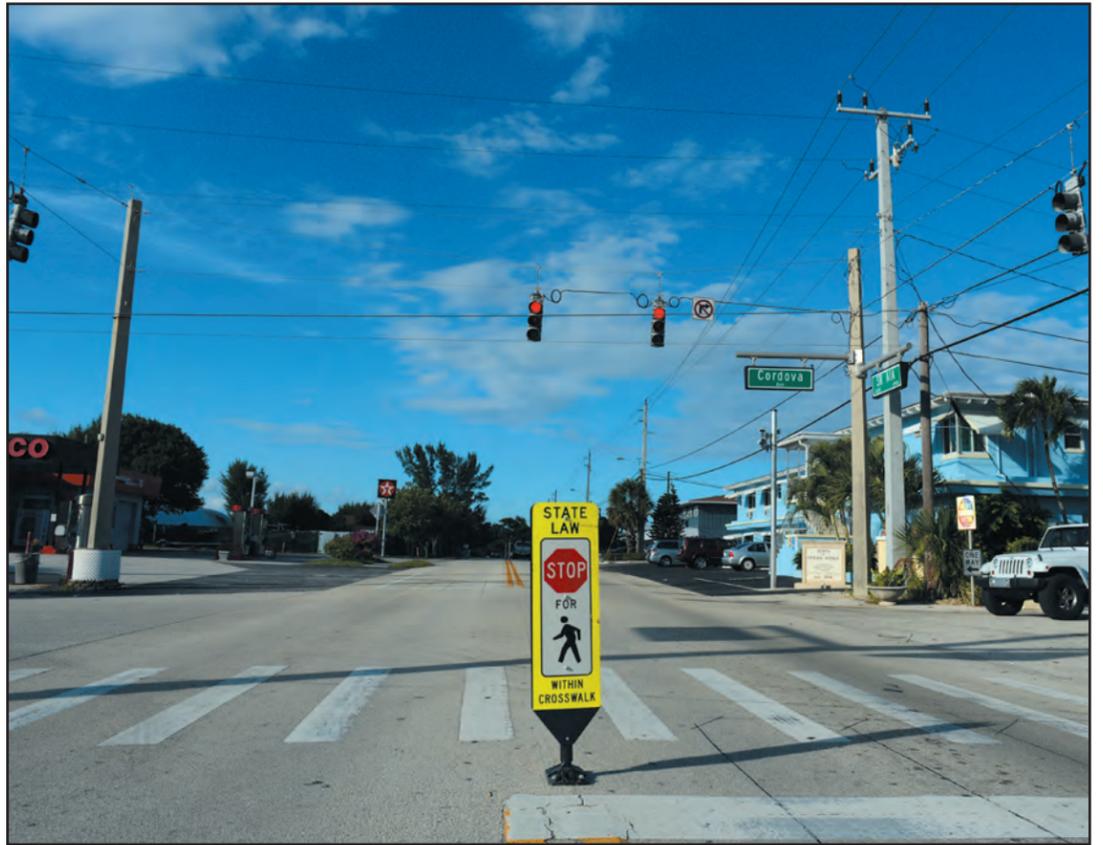

In other business, Sugerman said he is working with the Florida Department of Transportation to determine whether a "Stop for Pedestrians Within Crosswalk" sign belongs in the A1A crosswalk at the Cordova Avenue intersection.

Sugerman said FDOT inexplicably put the sign there recently, not long after the town requested a replacement sign for the one damaged by a motorist in September at the Ruthmary Avenue crosswalk. FDOT installed a new sign at that crosswalk two weeks prior to the Cordova replacement.

Residents have complained that the Cordova sign causes confusion because the intersection has a traffic light to assist pedestrians.

"I agree that there are conflicting commands," he said, telling the council FDOT plans to examine the sign to see if it is appropriate. ★

Briny Breezes residents say that having a crosswalk stop at an intersection with a traffic light is confusing. The state may have erred when it put in the sign. Jerry Lower/The Coastal Star

Family ends 68-year hotel run; deluxe development will replace Wright by the Sea

By Christine Davis

This will be the last Thanksgiving holiday that Dorothy Gay “GiGi” Wright Vela, her siblings, their children and grandchildren will gather for dinner at Wright by the Sea, the beach hotel that has been in her family since 1950.

“My daughter cooks the turkey,” Vela said. “We eat it in the chickee hut that the Seminoles built for us 40 years ago.

“Its roof has been replaced only once and that was after Hurricane Sandy,” she says of the 2012 storm. “All of our children and grandchildren get to be with each other.”

On Oct. 1, Vela and her family sold their oceanfront property, the 29-room Wright by the Sea at 1901 S. Ocean Blvd., Delray Beach, to National Realty Investment Advisors and U.S. Construction Inc. for $25 million. The Wright family corporation is leasing it back through November, then the hotel will close permanently.

“We never put it up for sale. The buyer came to us. When I signed the contract, I felt like someone had socked me in the stomach. I couldn’t take a breath,” said Vela, 83.

Candace Friis, an agent with the Corcoran Group, brought the buyers and handled both sides of the off-market deal.

It was time to sell, Vela acknowledged.

“We were being taxed out of business. The property taxes were a quarter of a million for 29 rooms. And then there’s the 10 percent bed tax, and there are other taxes and we had health insurance to pay for our employees.”

No one connected with the hotel is happy about the sale, Vela added.

“Our family is devastated. Our staff is devastated — they’ve been with us for years. And we have 7,500 guests who come stay with us a year and they will now have no place to go.

“We are directly on the beach. Our property is so lovely, and when I walk through the breezeway, I think it’s just like paradise. But we realized that we couldn’t keep a hotel that’s not making money, and decided we had to sell it.”

On the upside, longevity runs in the family. Vela’s father lived well into his 90s, and Vela, who received a doctorate in psychology and human development in 1996, feels time is on her side. She looks forward to working in her new field.

“My friends say, ‘Now you have time to play bridge with us,’ but I don’t think so. I don’t want to play cards when there’s so much to do that’s exciting.”

And where will the family celebrate Thanksgiving in the future? “That’s to be determined,” Vela said.

Plans for property

National Realty Investment Advisors and U.S. Construction will redevelop the property into a condominium project and beach club on the almost 2-acre beachfront parcel. On the half-acre across the street at 1060 Del Harbor Drive, a parcel that was included in the deal, they plan to build townhomes.

The buyers received a $22 million mortgage from affiliates of New York-based Ares Commercial Real Estate Management.

“It’s going to be totally new construction, a luxurious offering of 19 units on the ocean, envisioned to feel like you are living in your own private beachfront residence,” said Stephann Cotton, president of the Stuart-based marketing and advertising firm representing the owners. “Today’s sophisticated buyers will appreciate the rare opportunity of buying direct oceanfront in one of America’s most sought-after towns. It’s the best design, the finest quality and oceanfront location to come to market in decades.”

Delray Beach architect Randall Stofft has already put together some designs, which will, in time, be released along with timetables on a registrants website, oceandelray.com.

National Realty Investment Advisors is a New Jersey-based development and investment firm with a focus on construction and renovation of townhomes, condos and multifamily projects in the Northeast. It has developed about 715 units since 2010 and has $335 million worth of projects in progress.

Local projects include the purchase of a $7 million waterfront development at 1248 and 1240 Seaspray Ave. in Delray Beach, and the $13 million purchase of two vacant waterfront lots at 2929 and 3565 N. Ocean Blvd. in Gulf Stream.

In June, the firm secured a $16.5 million loan to build a 14-townhome project, Gulfstream Views, on 2 acres at 30 Briny Breezes Blvd. in the County Pocket.

U.S. Construction Inc. of Philadelphia has developed and constructed more than 1,500 luxury homes and units among 50 complexes over the past 10 years. Its website notes the following Delray Beach projects underway: residences at 316 N. Ocean Blvd., 322 N. Ocean Blvd., 707 N. Ocean Blvd., 2929 N. Ocean Blvd. and 3565 N. Ocean Blvd.; four residences at 142 NE Seventh Ave.; a residence at 1239 Laing St.; and two townhomes at 837 Denery Lane.

Stephann Cotton’s Cotton & Company will take the marketing lead on this project. IMI Living will manage sales. ★

Boynton Beach

Construction means city will light tree in Dewey Park for Christmas

By Jane Smith

About a month into the Town Square project that will create a downtown for Boynton Beach, “everything is on track,” said Colin Groff, assistant city manager in charge of the project.

In October, the Civic Center, Art Center, City Library and Madsen Center buildings were demolished to make way for the 16-acre project. The area is under development by a public-private partnership among the city, its Community Redevelopment Agency and the development team of E2L Real Estate Solutions.

On the south side of Ocean Avenue, the new downtown will include a City Center that combines City Hall and the library, an amphitheater, a play area and a garage. The buildings should be finished in early 2020.

On the north side of Ocean Avenue, the existing City Hall, police headquarters and Fire Station 1 are slated to be torn down in November. The north side will have a district energy plant and a new Fire Station 1, along with a privately built hotel, retail space, offices, restaurants, apartments and a garage.

In past years, the city’s holiday tree lighting occurred in front of the Schoolhouse Children’s Museum, just east of City Hall. Because of the ongoing construction, that location is not suitable for the tree lighting ceremony because public parking is not available.

Instead, Boynton Beach Mayor Steven Grant suggested using the banyan tree in Dewey Park as the city’s “Christmas tree.” The park is three blocks east and out of the construction zone.

At the city’s October CRA meeting, board member Justin Katz joked, “It’s imperative that if an article is written about this that it says: Jewish mayor saves Christmas.”

The CRA board unanimously agreed to spend up to $25,000 to light up the banyan tree and the surrounding area after the city’s holiday parade on Dec. 1. The parade starts at 4 p.m. The banyan tree will be lit nightly through early January. The CRA received three bids with costs ranging from $5,000 to $20,000 for the banyan tree lighting. Last year, the holiday tree lighting cost $36,000 to light up the artificial tree near the Children’s Museum. ★

Stars to light up the courts at Evert classic

Tennis stars John McEnroe, Patrick McEnroe and Martina Navratilova and actors Chris Noth and Jon Lovitz are scheduled to be among the celebrities on hand when Chris Evert hosts the 29th annual Chris Evert/Raymond James Pro-Celebrity Tennis Classic Nov. 9-11 at the Delray Beach Tennis Center.

A staple on the south Palm Beach County sports calendar, the event has raised more than $24 million for charity while featuring luminaries such as former President George H.W. Bush, Chevy Chase, Matthew Perry and Olivia Newton-John.

Sports celebrities featured over the years have included tennis stars Jimmy Connors, Lindsay Davenport, Tracy Austin, Jennifer Capriati, Venus Williams and Serena Williams. Other sports luminaries involved have been Don Shula, Pat Riley, Jim Palmer, Sugar Ray Leonard and Keith Hernandez.

Festivities begin with Tennis With Chrissie and Friends, an exclusive pro-am from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. that Friday at the Boca Raton Resort and Club, and continue with the Classic Cocktail Reception from 7 to 9 p.m. at the club's garden pool.

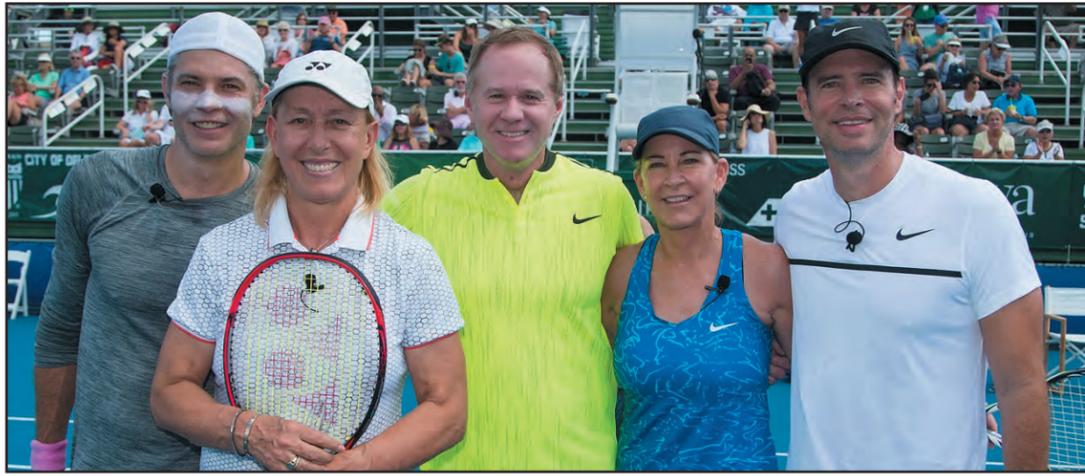

Action moves to the Delray Beach Tennis Center beginning at 11 a.m. Saturday, where tennis legends will be paired with an array of celebrities from the entertainment and sports worlds.

Saturday evening will feature the 29th annual Pro Celebrity Gala starting at 6, featuring Blood, Sweat and Tears back at the Boca Raton Resort. The event concludes with more matches at the Tennis Center on Sunday.

Tickets start at $20 general admission, with a wide range of ticket packages available at www.chrisevert.org or by calling 394-2400.

While Evert prepares for her Pro-Celebrity Tennis Classic, she's also trying to sell her west Boca Raton estate and she's offering an unusual incentive: a private tennis lesson.

Evert, who retired from professional tennis in 1989, listed her property at 8563 Horseshoe Lane last spring for $4.99 million. Built in 1995, the house and two guesthouses are sited on more than 5 acres. Evert bought it for $2.8 million in 2003, when she was married to Olympic skier Andy Mill. Katia Reisler of Douglas Elliman and

Martina Navratilova (with racket) is a regular at Chris Evert's charity event and is among those set to be part of the festivities again Nov. 9-11. 2017 photo provided by Camerawork, USA

Rebecca Spooner of Siemens Group Realty are the listing agents.

A Hillsboro Beach mansion at 935 Hillsboro Mile, known as Le Palais Royal and Playa Vista, will sell to the highest bidder in November, forgoing its previous asking price of $159 million and without a reserve price. Mayi de la Vega, owner of One Sotheby's International Realty, is the listing agent. Concierge Auctions will handle the auction, which begins Nov. 12 and ends Nov. 15.

The 60,000-square-foot estate has 11 bedrooms, 22 bathrooms, an IMAX home theater, six waterfalls and two deep-water docks. Robert Pereira, president of the Middlesex Corp., a contracting firm based in Massachusetts, owns the property, which was first listed on the market in 2014 for $139 million, going up in price the following year. It was taken off the market in 2016.

Andrew Robins sold a new home, designed by Jag Design and Development, on a half-acre at 3833 S. Ocean Blvd., Highland Beach, to software entrepreneur Michael J. Rothberg and his wife, Judith, for $21.5 million. Robins bought the property for $3.675 million in 2014. The recent sale was recorded on Oct. 10. Michael Rothberg was previously the head of Boca Raton-based Sengent, which is now owned by New York-based Clarifi.

National Hockey League star Max Pacioretty sold his five-bedroom and 4½-acre estate at 434 Areca Palm Road, Boca Raton, after it spent only five days on the market in mid-October. The property sold for $3.1 million and was listed with Devin Kay, an agent with Douglas Elliman, for $3.45 million.

Features include smart house technology, safe room and indoor/outdoor basketball and sports court. Pacioretty plays for the Vegas Golden Knights after spending 10 years with Montreal.

The Fite Group Luxury Homes, a real estate firm headquartered in Palm Beach with offices in Delray Beach, Palm Beach Gardens and Wellington, has partnered with William Raveis Real Estate.

"This partnership with Raveis expands our network for our clientele, gives our agents access to cutting-edge technology and combines the high levels of service and luxury market positions for which both companies are known," said David Fite, founder and principal of the Fite Group.

This partnership presented an opportunity for both companies. Since many Palm Beach County home buyers come from the Northeast, the Fite Group offers Raveis local expertise in Palm Beach County.

"We have great respect for the Fite Group's expertise and commitment to the discerning communities of Palm Beach County, demonstrated by David and Nadine Fite's strong leadership," said chairman and CEO Bill Raveis, who founded William Raveis Real Estate 44 years ago.

According to its websites, the Fite Group, founded 10 years ago, has 100 agents and has completed more than $5 billion in sales.

Over four decades, Raveis has grown from a single office over a grocery store in Connecticut to a family enterprise with more than 4,000 professionals in 130 offices across nine states, resulting in $10.2 billion in real estate sales in 2017.

Delray Beach was selected by Expedia as one of the best honeymoon destinations in America.

The honor was based on four sweet spots: Delray Beach got four out of five "bicycle" icons for action, four out of four "cityscape" icons for scenery, three out of four "roses" for vibes and two out of four "dollar signs" for affordability.

In other words, Delray Beach scored well in three out of the four criteria. Delray Beach is so great, the article reads, that "you might want to tie the knot all over again."

Planning the perfect day in Delray Beach just got a whole lot easier. The Delray Beach Marketing Cooperative recently launched an app on visitdelraybeach.org that provides an interactive way to map out things to do in the city.

Users can explore everything from events to popular restaurants to points of interest, as well as hotels and attractions — all with driving directions.

"See a beach activity you don't want to miss?" asked Stephanie Immelman, the cooperative's executive director. "Click 'Join' and the event will be added to your plan. Want to invite some friends? Share your plan with them directly or via social media, email or SMS."

The Delray Beach Downtown Development Authority's Delray Beach Fashion Week received a Silver Award in the special event category from Visit Florida's 2018 Flagler Awards at the Florida Governor's Conference on Tourism in Orlando.

On Small Business Day, Nov. 24 in downtown Delray Beach, shoppers can enjoy a holiday stroll and avail themselves of in-store and outdoor promotions, entertainment, festive decorations and light bites.

For this event, the Delray

Beach Downtown Development Authority partnered with the City of Delray Beach, CRA and the Delray Beach Chamber of Commerce.

Recent additions to the downtown area include Biba, Doughnut Works, JuiceBuzz Mrkt & Juicery, Ramen Lab Eatery, Beachfront Properties, Wine House Social, Nada's Italy, Style de Vie and Jennifer on the Avenue.

They join longtime local businesses Vince Canning Shoes, Avalon Gallery, Murder on the Beach Bookstore, Hand's, Snappy Turtle, Delray Camera Shop, Huber's Pharmacy, Periwinkle, Richwagen's Delray Bike & Sport, and many more.

At the Shop Small hospitality booths, customers who spend $50 at a downtown Delray Beach small business can receive complimentary gifts and Shop Small giveaways.

The booths will be in Pineapple Grove by the banyan tree in front of Addison Gallery, 206 NE Second St., Delray Beach, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and in front of Hand's Office & Art Supply, 325 E. Atlantic Ave., from 2 to 4 p.m.

Visit DowntownDelrayBeach.com/ShopSmall for a list of participating merchants.

Event-goers can have fun playing cards while raising money to feed local seniors in need at Viva Las Vegas, an event that benefits the Community Caring Center of Palm Beach County. It will be from 6 to 11 p.m. Nov. 10 at Mercedes-Benz of Delray, 1001 Linton Blvd. After a cocktail reception, gaming will open with blackjack, Texas hold 'em, slot machines, roulette and craps. There will also be music by the Sound Proof, a silent auction, a carving station, heavy hors d'oeuvres, dessert buffet, coffee and tea. Tickets are $100. For tickets, go to cccgb.org/2018-viva-las-vegas.

Through Dec. 7, the 13th annual Project Holiday will accept donated items for deployed members of the U.S. military.

For this initiative, the City of Delray Beach is partnering with two local organizations: You Are Not Alone and One Soldier at a Time.

You Are Not Alone provides encouragement and emotional support to family members and friends of troops, while One Soldier at a Time sends care packages and words of

Grant helps fund playground improvements

By Jane Smith

Oceanfront Park will soon have upgraded playground equipment and a fitness area for adults after Boynton Beach city commissioners approved the $150,000 project in early October.

Kompan Inc., a Texas-based playground equipment maker, awarded a $50,000 grant to Boynton Beach, said Andrew Mack, the city's public works director. "We were one of five nationally this year to receive the grant," he told commissioners on Oct. 2.

Assembly of the playground will start in November and finish in January.

Installation of new playground equipment should be finished in January. Rendering provided

The playground site will be moved closer to the parking lot to allow two "megatowers" to be built. One unit will have climb-up ropes and slides, while the larger one will have a walking deck, Mack said.

The adult fitness area will have stair-climbers, pushup bars and stretching equipment, according to the drawings. Commissioner Mack McCray asked about shade coverings over the slides so that the equipment would not be too hot to use by kids wearing bathing suits.

Shade sails will not be installed, but the equipment will be placed close to the trees to provide some shade, Mack said.

The playground equipment should last 10 years, Mack said. It uses galvanized steel fittings and recyclable plastic that can "withstand the salt air."★

Turkey Day toasts

Be brief and heartfelt when you raise glass in gratitude, expert speakers say

By Mary Thurwachter

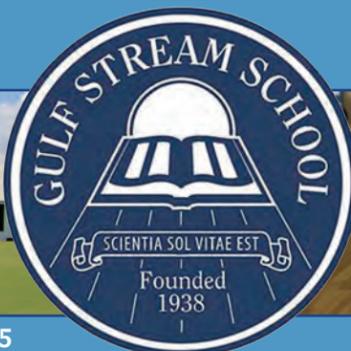

There you are at the head of an elegantly set table, staring down at a big, beautiful roasted turkey with all the fixings. A collection of family and friends, some of whom you see only once a year, has assembled in your home. It is the perfect occasion for a Thanksgiving toast. But what do you say? You can pull out the same one you've used for years, if you like.

TOASTS

Thomas

Sheree Thomas, president of the Boca Raton Noon Toastmasters, has done that with this short and sweet toast by an author she found online:

May your stuffing be tasty, may your turkey be plump, may your potatoes and gravy have nary a lump.

May your yams be delicious, and your pies take the prize, and may your Thanksgiving dinner stay off of your thighs!

Lantana Chamber of Commerce President Dave

Arm

Arm, who has mastered the gift of gab, plans to deliver this snappy toast:

We give thanks to those who bravely sailed across the sea to discover this New World, to those who built it into the greatest country on earth, for the food we are about to enjoy and for our families and friends both here and away. But most of all, we give thanks that we can enjoy this feast in shorts and flipflops!

"Over the river and through the woods" on a sleigh? No way!

Lantana's Town Council, traditionally has his family hold hands around the table as each takes a turn at telling something for which he or she is thankful. Balfour, who was born in South Africa and worked for the National Enquirer for many years, remembers how he came to love the November holiday.

"My first four or five turkey dinners were all at the New Orleans Athletic Club, which served a delicious feast after athletes ran in the famous Turkey Trot down the main street," Balfour said. "I never realized what a wonderful holiday it was until experiencing it in private homes. First, it's totally 100 percent American. And second, the great thing about it is there are no presents, no presents!"

As part of his toasts, Balfour likes to quote songwriter Irving Berlin:

Got no checkbooks, got no banks. Still I'd like to express my thanks. Got the sun in the morning and the moon at night.

Balfour quips that when the first settlers landed in Florida, our Indians were smarter than the ones at Plymouth Rock. The Seminole chieftainess — he said — proclaimed: "Don't feed 'em. If you do they'll never leave."

John Lynch, who lives in Ocean Ridge and is a member of The Little Club, says he's going to a restaurant for Thanksgiving this year and won't need to give a toast. However, he has given many over the years, and has some advice for those who want to prepare their own turkey day salutations.

"Brevity is the soul of wit," Lynch says, quoting Shakespeare (Polonius in Hamlet). "Every toast should be thought of along those lines. A lot of people ramble, seemingly enjoying the sound of their own voice. It's just not good."

Last year, Lynch came up with this salute, which he calls silly and short, but it got a laugh:

Let's all raise a glass to Wishbone and Drumstick, the two turkeys pardoned by the president yesterday (pause) and kindly thank them for sending their cousin Backbone to us for dinner today! God bless America and happy Thanksgiving!

Besides keeping toasts brief, Lynch says he typically tries to personalize his. "I always consider who is going to be there. And you try and keep it light. Serious things get weighed down. The wittier toasts are always the best."

Kimberlee Duke Marshall, president of the Ocean Ridge Garden Club, toasts

Marshall

Thanksgiving as her favorite holiday. "It is the purest representation of sharing and life just feels that much better when shared," Marshall says. "Nothing is as good without sharing it, and then you add a little wine — in vino veritas!"

Toasting as a tradition began centuries ago. Ancient Persians, Egyptians, Hebrews, Saxons and Huns were all toasters, drinking to their health and welfare. They put bread crumbs into their goblets to cut the acidity of the bitter wine. That led to the phrase "to toast" from the Latin word "tostus," which means to dry up.

When the custom spread in Europe, the ritual added something new — the clinking of glasses. Everyone drank at the same time and added sound to the experience of taste, smell and sight.

Thomas, a personal trainer who lives in Boynton Beach, has achieved the coveted title level of master toastmaster and enjoys helping others improve their communication skills through speeches. And she says toasts are speeches, albeit very short ones. She agrees with Lynch that humor is vital.

"It's a skill, not a gift," Thomas says. "You have to practice and avoid crudeness and be sure it's relevant to your audience. I never want to offend anyone." In fact, practice is very valuable for people giving toasts, or any type of speech, Thomas says. "I practice while walking the beach, or in front of a mirror, or sometimes have someone tape me so I can evaluate how I sound."

Those who would like to improve their toasting skills, or speaking skills, are invited to join a local Toastmasters Club.

For more information, call Thomas at 251-4164 or visit www.bocaratontoastmasters.org. ★

More tips for toasts

Prepare an opening, body and conclusion. A toast is a speech, a very short speech. Make sure it fits the occasion in both mood and language. Avoid clichés. Tired expressions such as "down the hatch" or "here's mud in your eye" are the last refuge of the uncertain toastmaster. Be sincere. The best toasts are heartfelt. Don't embarrass anyone. Be sensitive to your audience and to the occasion. Use vocabulary variety. Humor is vital, but be sure it's relevant and won't offend anyone.

Small center for adults with disabilities keeps clients in motion

By Janis Fontaine

Not far from the intersection of Spanish River Boulevard and Dixie Highway in Boca Raton, a gathering of adults with disabilities is singing and dancing, doing crafts, laughing with friends and playing games. Some are learning to play the piano.

The activities are part of Twin Palms Center for the Disabled, which has been serving the community for 50 years by nurturing adults with physical or developmental disabilities. About a dozen men and women from their early 20s to their 60s come to the center, which is open Monday through Friday, for fun, friendship and field trips.

David and Linda Pilossof of Boca Raton have been taking their son Robert, 41, to the center for about three years. They like the program because it's small and intimate, giving Robert lots of personal attention.

But the Pilossofs, who are avid bike riders, say the biggest difference between this and other programs is the fitness aspect. David said that at Robert's former program, "he was sitting down constantly. It was important to us that he get exercise. At Twin Palms, they go and do lot of things: the zoo, the library. And they go bowling every week."

The Pilossofs found the program when David noticed the clients playing basketball. He noticed they were having fun and were well-supervised. He saw the logo on the side of the van and called.

Executive Director Christopher Berens says most people discover Twin Palms through word-of-mouth and admits the center is one of the best-kept secrets in town, but not intentionally. "We're a hidden gem," he laughs.

Berens has held the reins at Twin Palms for just over a year, but he started as a volunteer. While studying music at FAU, he created his system — a novel way to teach piano that was easy to learn. He wondered if it would work with special needs students, so he brought the program to Twin Palms to try it out.

"Most of them get it," Berens said. And most can play a familiar tune right away, which builds self-esteem and excitement.

As a result, music has become a big part of the program, with Berens playing the piano and singing with residents every day. Berens, who has degrees in music and psychology, said, "I always felt drawn to special needs and I discovered I had a way with this population. The need for programs is great."

But not all programs are the same. "This is a fully recreational program," Berens said. Because it has no vocational component, the center doesn't qualify for state money.

Tuition at Twin Palms is affordable, in part because it owns the building, so there's no Boca-sized rent or mortgage, but the center depends on grants and gifts and hosts a few fundraisers each year.

Berens would like to serve more clients, but not too many. Because the group is small, Berens said, "we get to know them as people."

For the Pilossofs, that was another plus. At another program, there were too many people and Robert got lost in the crowd.

Small groups make it easier to take nature walks and field trips to places like Butterfly World, a favorite destination. "Mobility is important," Berens said. "We do fun stuff, and they want to go."

Also important to Berens: "Our clients have friendships, and a place where they're respected."

David says Robert is "more comfortable" and "he gets more attention." Plus, lunch is provided, which saves parents and caretakers a few more minutes, and dollars, each day.

Twin Palms was born out of necessity in 1968 when a group of parents of children with developmental delays arrived at a common but perplexing predicament: what to do with their children who had aged out of the public school system.

A half century ago, services were scarce or expensive and often both. The parents' solution was to start their own program and the Boca Raton Society for the Disabled, now Twin Palms Center for the Disabled, was born.

On Nov. 10, Twin Palms will celebrate its 50th anniversary with a picnic. The city of Boca Raton will recognize Twin Palms for its continuing contributions to the community. Over the years, Twin Palms has helped more than 300 people reach their potential, Berens said.

There's a lot that David and Linda Pilossof could say about Twin Palms, but the only thing that really matters to them is this: "Robert loves it." ★

New channel on healthy living gets viewers involved in shows

During the long hours when Penelope Douglas and her team put together the new Health Channel, she learned a few things she hadn't expected — including the virtues of eating beans. More on that in a moment.

Douglas was no stranger to health, medicine and eating right. Her background was producing health programs for television.

The Health Channel, which launched in August, is a digital channel of South Florida PBS and is available to Palm Beach County viewers over the air and on Comcast and Hotwire. The channel is a mix of live and recorded programs featuring medical professionals from Baptist Health South Florida. They soon will be joined by colleagues from Bethesda Healthcare Systems, which recently joined the Baptist Health network.

The Health Channel team hit the ground running on March 1, hiring a small production staff, creating a weekly schedule, collecting doctors and helping them to explain confusing medical terms.

The Health Channel includes a website where the public can search for specific ailments and view Baptist Health experts, available in two- to three-minute versions of full-length interviews, which are about an hour long.

One of the Health Channel's best features is interactivity. Viewers can call in and participate before or during the live shows and discuss specific health issues.

The doctors work with interactive 3-D body graphics to make the discussions more specific and understandable.

The Health Channel broadcasts 24 hours a day. Each week the team produces 20 hours of programming, including four hours of live TV, on topics from orthopedics to nutrition, cancer to kids' health. Programs repeat during the remaining hours of the week.

A viewer who leaves a message about a specific medical condition on the Health Channel's answering machine may be surprised to receive a callback from a staff member, who will let the caller know that, say, a cardiologist will be interviewed at 7 a.m. the following day.

"People have been so grateful and complimentary," said Douglas, who is one of the people who regularly makes these calls. "But sometimes I do have to tell them more than once that I'm not trying to sell them anything."

In one case, the callback was not routine. A viewer had left a message saying she noticed blood in her stool.

Douglas called back immediately. A man answered. When Douglas identified herself, he hung up on her. Douglas called back and this time a woman answered. Before the woman could hang up, Douglas explained why she was calling and told her a doctor would be discussing colon cancer the next day at 11 a.m. on the Health Channel.

"She had a complete change of attitude," said Douglas. "She said, thank you so much."

Many medical centers have cameras in place, so in the future Douglas and her colleagues hope to be able to call health experts and researchers all over the country.

The Health Channel has already started broadcasting human-interest stories on patients and doctors, including triplets who are obstetrician-gynecologists working with their mother, also an ob-gyn.

Besides covering the big categories, the channel drills down to lesser-known issues like cancer-related depression and heart problems caused by cancer treatments. In a recent program, a psychotherapist told the story of how her sudden depression led her doctor to find the cancer and then help her treat the cancer and the depression.

Now, about those beans. The Health Channel includes a number of shows on nutrition and exercise. The dietitian on a nutrition show took a call from a woman on dialysis who wanted to eat better but pointed out that it's often cheaper to eat bad food.

The nutritionist told the woman that canned beans are healthy and cheap, about 20 cents a serving. She then made a bean salad.

"It was delicious," Douglas reported. The shows, she said, "are not just hypothetical. The dietitian said, here is an example and it is cheap. I loved that call. And these shows have changed my eating and exercise habits. Now I set an alarm and every half hour I get up and walk."

In focus groups, health was a topic that interested potential viewers, said Bill Scott, executive vice president of South Florida PBS. South Florida PBS and Baptist Health South Florida were a good match because their customer footprint was similar, stretching from the Florida Keys to Martin County.

The Health Channel can be viewed on television, smartphone and the internet. The website already contains about 1,000 health-related videos, Scott said.

"The world of health and medicine is evolving so rapidly and we want to be ready for that future," he said.

"Whatever we do, we always ask, is there another way, a better way, to do it, in keeping with our mission to serve the community," said Scott. "I put myself in the shoes of the viewer and say, does this make sense to me, does it look interesting, does it provide information that's useful?"

"The payoff is when we get emails and calls from people who say what they like."

To contact the Health Channel, phone 855-796-4475.

Delray Medical Center earns stroke center certification

Delray Medical Center earned the thrombectomy-capable stroke center certification from The Joint Commission in collaboration with the American Heart Association and American Stroke Association. Certification means the hospital meets standards for performing mechanical endovascular thrombectomy, a specialized surgical procedure used to remove a blood clot from the brain during an ischemic stroke.

Stroke is the fifth-leading cause of death in the United States, and more than 87 percent of cases are ischemic strokes. These types of strokes are largely treatable if a patient gets to a hospital that can provide the right treatment in time.

The Christine E. Lynn Women's Health & Wellness Institute at Boca Raton Regional Hospital was illuminated with pink lights during October in recognition of Breast Cancer Awareness Month. The initial lighting included a program that was attended by Boca Regional administrators, physicians, supporters and other community leaders.

The new Kathryn Krickstein Pressel MammoVan was on display to showcase its customized interior and advanced mammography equipment, and Saks Fifth Avenue featured designer Lafayette 148 New York with a fashion presentation and beauty bar.

Delray Medical Center appointed Maggie Gill to the position of chief executive officer in September. Previously, Gill was CEO of Novant Health UVA Health System, which runs three hospitals in Virginia. Prior to that, she was president and CEO at Memorial Health in Savannah, Ga.

1972 Bertram inspires deep affection, memories

Bill Parks has been boating on classic deep-V Bertrams since he was a boy growing up in Delray Beach.

A veteran scuba diver and lifelong boater, Parks still uses his 1972 Bertram 25, named Dreamfinder, and is gradually restoring it at his home in Boynton Beach.

Parks, 60, grew up fishing and diving on his father's 1964 model 25 Bertram Express Cruiser, named Better Times II.

He continued the family's Bertram tradition in 1986, when he and his wife, Chris, paid $9,300 for a Bertram 25 they found at a marina on the Hillsboro Canal. They named it Dreamfinder.

The boat is special to Parks because of the many happy days he and Chris, who died of cancer in 2002, spent on it, diving for tropical fish and running across the open ocean on frequent summer crossings to Bimini.

"The best times of my life were spent with the love of my life on this boat," Parks said while looking at his weathered Bertram. "Our summers were priceless."

Parks is so protective of the Dreamfinder that he towed it to Titusville when Hurricane Irma was bearing down on South Florida last year.

The boat's mascot, a tiny doll named Figment, sits on the dashboard near the helm — a reminder of the years he spent on board with Chris. He still uses the wooden scuba tank racks that Chris made for the Dreamfinder.

"It's a member of my family, even though it's a machine," Parks said.

Parks is not alone in his love of Bertram boats, which have something of a cult following.

South Florida has dozens of Bertram devotees, some of whom have painstakingly restored Bertrams built during the 1960s and '70s.

The boat company was founded in Miami by veteran sailor and boat broker Richard Bertram. His boats set a new standard for ocean powerboats in the 1960s because of their wave-slicing, deep-V bottoms.

Bertram was sailing in America's Cup trials off of Rhode Island in 1958 when he spotted a powerboat cruising by at 30 knots in 6-foot seas.

He tracked down the boat's designer, Raymond Hunt, and commissioned Hunt to build him a 31-foot boat with a deep-V bottom, which he named Moppie after his second wife.

Bertram raised eyebrows in boating circles in 1960, when he and crew members Sam Griffith and Charlton Mitchell aboard the Moppie won the Miami-to-Nassau with a two-hour lead over the second-place boat.

As for Parks, he plans to keep the Dreamfinder as long as he's able to use it and eventually hand it down to a family member or sell it to someone who cares enough to maintain it well.

Meanwhile, Parks continues to use his 46-year-old boat, powered by twin 140-horsepower MerCruiser inboard/outboard engines, and is restoring it little by little.

"I want the boat to look the way we used to keep it," Parks said. "It's going to take time."

Beswick triumphs in Bluewater Babes event

Sherry Beswick of Lake Worth caught a 49-pound kingfish to win heaviest fish in the 10th annual Bluewater Babes Fish for a Cure tournament, held Oct. 6 at Sailfish Marina in Palm Beach Shores.

Beswick was fishing with captain Bill Wummer on Spiced Rum III when she caught the winning fish on a slow-trolled blue runner in 150 feet of water off Juno Beach.

Tasha Ford caught the biggest dolphin, 20.2 pounds, aboard Temptation. Shelby Gore won the "meat fish" division with a 16.9-pound blackfin tuna caught aboard Carolina Gentleman.

Emily Riemer won the billfish division with two sailfish releases on the Day Sea.

Only women can fish in the Bluewater Babes event, which provides support to women suffering from breast and ovarian cancer.

Knot Surfin' wins X-Gen tournament

Lantana-based charter captain Chuck Hampton and his team on Knot Surfin' won the X-Generation Anglers for Soldiers KDW Fishing Tournament with a 36-pound kingfish.

Hampton said Jamie Locastro caught the winning kingfish on a live goggle-eye in 135 feet of water off Lost Tree Village. Hampton said the winning kingfish hit the first bait in the water during the Sept. 22 tournament, noting that fishing was relatively slow most of the day.

A bad alternator on the boat's engine almost prevented the Knot Surfin' from making it back to Sailfish Marina in Palm Beach Shores to weigh the kingfish, which won $5,000.

Organized by X-Generation Custom Rods in Lantana,

Members of the Knot Surfin' team show the 36-pound kingfish that won the $5,000 top prize as the largest fish in the X-Generation Anglers for Soldiers KDW Fishing Tournament, held Sept. 22. the tournament attracted 35 boats and benefited Forgotten Soldiers Outreach, a Lake Worth nonprofit that sends care packages to American troops.

Finding Faith

As with past celebrations of 'Chanukah Under the Stars,' music will be an important part of the Dec. 7 event, with three choirs performing. Photo provided

Festival of Lights celebration to grace Mizner

Thanks in part to a Jewish Outreach grant from the Jewish Federation of South Palm Beach County, "Chanukah Under the Stars," the signature event of Temple Beth El, returns to Mizner Park Amphitheater in downtown Boca Raton in December. The last time the event was held was in 2014, and more than 4,000 people came out to celebrate the Festival of Lights at a shabbat service that included extra music, food, games and festivities.

"We usually host it every other year, but we took some time off. It's a huge effort for the staff to put on the event," executive director Steve Kaufman said.

For the past few years, Temple Beth El has been busy renovating and remodeling its Schaefer campus, thanks to a $5 million grant it received in 2014. Since then, construction has been the ongoing focus, but on Dec. 7, the focus returns to the people. From 5 to 9 p.m. the local South Florida community — Jewish and non-Jewish alike — is invited to come together to celebrate one of Judaism's most popular and lively holidays.

"We look at this as our gift to the community," said Susan Stallone, director of marketing and communications for Temple Beth El. "It's a beautiful musical celebration."

A few upgrades have been added to make it even better. "For the first time, we'll be broadcasting the service on a video screen so people can see better," Kaufman said. "We'll also have the text of the service on another screen to help people follow along. We wanted to enhance the experience, and this was one way to do that."

"Chanukah Under the Stars" starts at 5 p.m. with activities in the children's area, including bounce houses, face painting, crafts and storytelling. A special Chanukah Tot Shabbat and songfest will follow. From 5 to 7 p.m., visitors can sample the variety of traditional latkes and other food available. The Chanukah Shabbat service will begin at 7:30 p.m. led by Rabbi Daniel Levin, Rabbi Jessica Spitalnic Brockman, Rabbi Greg Weisman, cantor Lori Shapiro and cantorial soloist Michelle Auslander Cohen.

"This year we have three choirs performing," Kaufman said. Temple Beth El's adult chorale will perform, as will as Shir Ruach, its teen group, and Shir Joy, the youth choir for grades 3 through 6.

The celebration will take a moment to recognize the temple's charity, The Giving Tree, which provides necessities such as new uniforms and school supplies to children whose parents cannot afford them. The Giving Tree also has a very active and generous holiday gift program that provides Christmas presents, yes, Christmas presents, to more than 100 families who live in the Dixie Manor Public Housing community in Boca Raton. The Giving Tree also provides the food for a full Christmas dinner.

"The Giving Tree is truly a light in the darkness, and the holiday is about being a light," Stallone said. For more information, visit www.thegivingtreeboca.org.

Admission to "Chanukah Under the Stars" is free, with a variety of food and drink vendors available. Sponsorship opportunities are available. Contact Leslie Viselman at 314-2836 or lviselman@tbeboca.org. Volunteers are also needed. Call Rachael Rand at 391-9091.

Skit Guys make church a laughing matter; see them at Cason United

Who says there's no laughing in church?

Tommy Woodard and Eddie James, known as "The Skit Guys," would disagree. The men, best friends for more than 20 years, have made a career out of poking fun at religion — and helping people get closer to God at the same time.

The Skit Guys travel the nation for performances from Florida to South Dakota. Woodard and James were the class clowns, most likely to laugh their way through life, but they've become a lifeline to God for people.

But they're just the guys people see. Their writers and production staff put together scripts for skits, videos, sermons, books, T-shirts and support materials, all designed to strengthen the bonds between church and congregation.

Tickets are on sale now for the Nov. 14 show at Cason United Methodist Church, 342 N. Swinton Ave., Delray Beach. Doors open at 6 p.m. (5:30 p.m. for VIP tickets), and the show begins at 7. Tickets are $25, $35 for VIP.

Trinity Lutheran hosts Love Delray

The first weekend of November is a great time to volunteer with churches that want to make Delray Beach a better city.

Love Delray is a quarterly initiative that partners church volunteers with nonprofits for a day of service. Participants can help with a beach cleanup, make repairs with Habitat for Humanity, work in the Delray Beach Children's Garden or pack care packages for troops, homeless people and veterans.

The program kicks off with a meeting for prayer and fellowship at 8 a.m. Nov. 3 at Trinity Lutheran Church, 400 N. Swinton Ave., Delray Beach. Volunteering is from 8:45 until noon.

In 2008: Susan Lerner moved into a home in West Palm Beach that had a typical Florida front yard dominated by St. Augustine sod and non-native shrubs and trees, with a pool in the backyard. Photos provided by Susan Lerner

Today: The same land is a mixture of fruit and native trees and shrubs, with mulch and decorative stones placed among them. The pool is converted into a pond with floating lilies. Lerner's home will be part of the Nov. 11 tour.

Garden tour to be source of landscaping ideas

Residents looking for new ideas to attract more birds and butterflies to their yards and snowbirds interested in landscaping that doesn't need much maintenance while they are up north might want to attend the annual Native Plant Garden Tour.

The Nov. 11 tour is sponsored by the Palm Beach County Chapter of the Florida Native Plant Society.

"We want to encourage people to plant Florida natives because only they support our native insects and those insects support birds," explained society member Susan Lerner, who says proceeds will benefit her group's educational programs.

The tour will stop at six destinations west of Military Trail, north of Woolbright Road and south of Northlake Boulevard in Palm Beach County. That facilitates driving from one location to the next.

Since March, Lerner has been on the lookout for gardens that are planted in about 80 percent native flora and made up of at least 40 native species.

"If a person has only a couple of cabbage palms and some cocoplum hedges, we don't qualify that as a native garden," said Lerner, who for this tour selected large gardens, including one that covers 5 acres.

These properties qualify not only because of what they have but also by what they eschew, which are invasive plants as defined by Palm Beach County and the Florida Exotic Pest Plant Council. And if any of these invasives are present, they will be labeled as such.

For the first time on this tour, Lerner's own half-acre garden in West Palm Beach will be on view. "When I moved in about

Plant giveaway and book sale

The first 250 people to visit the tour stop at Susan Lerner's home in West Palm Beach will receive two free native plants: a fogfruit groundcover that hosts three types of butterflies as well as a Simpson's stopper, a shrub or small tree that supports birds and pollinators (one pair of plants per household). Here too you can purchase the catalog from "Renewal: Going Native," a recent exhibition and sale of native plant photography at the Palm Beach Photographic Centre.

Photography contest

You can enter nature photos taken during the tour. It's free to enter and the winner will receive memberships in the society and the Photographic Centre, in West Palm Beach. The winning photo will hang at the center if a print is provided. The winner and five runners-up will appear in the society's monthly newsletter.

10 years ago, the place was pretty typical with a swimming pool, exotic and invasive plants around the perimeter of the property and surrounding the house as well as the mandatory lawn of grass and weeds," she said.

Her first step was to call

Carl Terwilliger, the owner of Meadow Beauty Nursery in Lake Worth. She hired him to inventory the natives already on the property. He found only about a half-dozen mature cabbage palms and a couple of slash palms among the Brazilian pepper, mother-in-law tongues, wedelia, tuberous sword fern and other invasives and exotics.

"Next I started thinning things out; there was tons of removal work to do," she said. That included hundreds of feet of Chalcas paniculata, which has a sweet-smelling flower at the same time it serves as a vector plant for citrus greening.

When she was ready to start planting, Lerner began with fruit trees even though they are not natives. "In my garden, I wanted there to be food for me and all the critters. It's a garden in which everybody gets to eat," she said.

She also studied the property's feng shui and found the "love" corner, where she planted a Haden mango in honor of her deceased parents, who claimed this variety as their favorite. "It seemed like the nice thing to do. And energy-wise, it was a good thing," she said.

Her mangoes are particularly interesting because that Haden is grafted with a Mahachanok, so she gets two types of mangoes from the same tree.

When you visit, you'll be able to view a basket with bananas and fruit from three twice-grafted mango trees, jaboticaba, mamey sapote and abiu, which produces a peach-sized golden-yellow fruit.

You'll also see how native shrubs, flowers and trees can be used for landscaping. And you'll discover how she converted that 15,000-gallon swimming pool into a pond complete with goldfish and water lilies.

Lerner believes that humans, instead of taking over the land and using it only for their own purposes, should share the earth with all living things.

"It's all about stewardship," she said. And that's why she plants natives and wants to share their advantages with you on this garden tour.

Paws Up for Pets

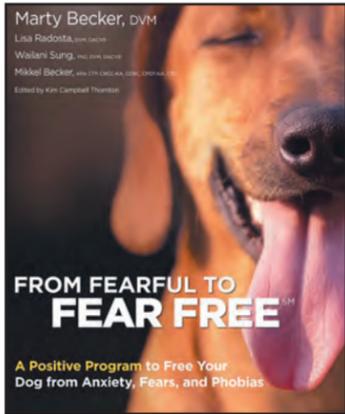

Behaviorist offers insight into helping stressed pets during holidays

When facing new or strange circumstances, far too many dogs transform into scaredy-cats and far too many cats become doggone full of fright. This full-throttle fear factor kicks into high gear during the holiday season.

From Halloween to New Year's, household routines disappear, leaving some pets filled with dread and confusion about loud house guests, odd decorations in the home, late meals and skipped daily walks that they cherish.

Lisa Radosta, DVM, who operates the Florida Veterinary Behavior Service in West Palm Beach, is among those leading the charge to give pet professionals and pet owners the tools they need to cultivate a sense of safety and security to pets 365 days a year.

She recently co-authored with Dr. Marty Becker, Dr. Wailani Sung and Mikkel Becker a new book, called From Fearful to Fear Free, that identifies ways veterinarians, pet sitters, boarding staffs, groomers, other pet professionals and families can work together to take the "pet" out of petrified in their four-legged friends. These experts bring a combined 88 years of professional experience in working directly with fearful animals.

From Fearful to Fear Free, available at Amazon and other outlets, offers strategies to make pets feel safe and secure.

Fear is a normal emotional response to a real or perceived threat, such as a dog dreading the anticipation of a cold bath or a cat seeing you bring out his pet carrier — a signal that he will have to go on a car ride to the veterinary clinic. These trigger an immediate response in the brain to the perceived threat. Mild-level signs include a tucked tail, trembling and hiding in the dark corner of a bedroom closet. Other less-obvious signs of fear include squinting eyes, lip licking, lifting a front paw and yawning.

Anxiety is apprehension or nervousness regarding an anticipated threat, such as what a dog is thinking when you pull your vehicle into the veterinary clinic's parking lot. Your dog is able to make the association that for the past three times he went for a car ride, he experienced unpleasant things at the veterinary clinic. Or your pet may urinate or poop in your house or bark nonstop when you leave him home alone due to his separation anxiety.

A phobia is fear on steroids. It is an exaggerated and irrational response that can emotionally and physically cripple a pet. A far-too-common pet phobia is toward thunderstorms. An affected dog or cat can develop behavioral issues, such as fear biting, or develop medical issues, such as a weakened immune system or chronic diarrhea.

"When a dog is frightened, on the surface, we see only that he is hiding under a chair, trembling, but major events have occurred inside his body, altering the way he feels emotionally and physically and ensuring that he will never forget that particular experience," says Radosta.

Here's a rundown of things that can turn pets into panic puddles:

- Car rides
- Veterinary visits
- The sound of a delivery truck backfiring and smell of exhaust fumes
- The loud beeping of a smoke detector
- Vacuum cleaners, especially the self-operating types
- Strangers, especially those wearing hats or sunglasses
- Singing battery-operated Santas
- The slippery floor inside a veterinary lobby or exam room

Unfortunately, there is no single solution to aiding scared pets. And pets are not cured overnight from their fears. You first need to tap all your senses and do a candid assessment of your pet's reactivity.

Do your best to remain calm and upbeat. Becoming impatient, yelling at your pet or forcing him into a carrier will only put him on full-fright alert.

Instead, try towel-wrapping or anti-anxiety pet vests, playing soothing music and using high-quality treats as a distraction.

"During the holidays, don't force your dog or cat to interact with guests. Forcing them will only make them fearful of people," says Radosta. "Instead, keep your pets in interior sanctuary rooms set up with their needs. For dogs, that includes food, toys, water, a bed, television or music. For cats, that includes a litter box, a bed, a place to go up high and water."

You also need to take a team approach with your veterinarian and possibly an animal behaviorist or certified pet trainer for your fearful pet.

"I want pet owners to know that they can ask for what is best for their pet in a respectful way and expect to have an honest and fair conversation with their veterinarian," says Radosta. "There are more and more veterinarians becoming certified in the Fear Free practice of handling pets."

Your pet may need over-the-counter supplements, prescriptions as well as behavior modification. Effective medications to address fear, anxiety and stress in pets include:

- Zylkene, a supplement that contains casein, a milk protein. It can be given before identified fear causes, such as a trip to the groomer or a follow-up veterinary visit.
- Adaptil, a dog-appeasing pheromone available in a plug-in diffuser, spray or collar. It contains chemicals that mimic relaxation in some dogs. The cat version is known as Feliway and comes in a plug-in diffuser or spray.
- Trazodone, Valium and Xanax, anti-anxiety prescriptions designed to be given before an anticipated fearful event, such as a thunderstorm or veterinary visit.
- Prozac, Zoloft and Clomicalm, medications prescribed to be given every day to help keep a dog in a steady, calm state.

"Stress happens to everyone, people and pets, so you have to decide how you will handle it," says Radosta. "For example, you can't change the smells in a veterinary clinic, but you can condition your dog to relax on a mat. And that mat can go anywhere with your dog."

Weighty tradition

Ever-present scale is an evergreen Publix amenity

By Ron Hayes

“Publix — Where Shopping Is a Pleasure.”

And then you spot that scale at the front of the store — that old-fashioned Toledo Model No. 2830, that always-present Publix scale, waiting to reveal your weight.

You set the bag of fried chicken aside, the footlong roast beef sub from the deli, the fresh-baked, cream-filled doughnuts from the bakery, and bravely step aboard.

Or maybe you smile.

Some folks can't resist checking their weight every time they stop at Publix. Others don't want to know.

David Smith of Lantana is a regular. On a recent Saturday morning, he stood on the green-trimmed scale at Manalapan right after the cashier handed him the receipt.

“I have diabetes,” he explained, “so I check my weight at every Publix.”

His fiancée, Jennifer DiMattina, kept her distance.

“David had me get on it once,” she confessed, “and I said, ‘Never again.’”

Actually, the scales have been part of Publix supermarkets a lot longer than shopping there has been a pleasure.

When George Jenkins opened his Publix Food Store on Sept. 6, 1930, in Winter Haven, there were no scales in the 27-by-65-foot space, and the store's motto was “Florida's Finest Food Store.”

The scales arrived on Nov. 8, 1940, when Jenkins introduced his bigger, grander “Publix Food Palace.” That newfangled supermarket had piped-in music, automatic doors, air conditioning, terrazzo floors — and a Toledo scale.

Woman Volunteer of the Year Luncheon breaking records

By Amy Woods

The Junior League of Boca Raton's Woman Volunteer of the Year Luncheon already has broken records. The highest number of nominees — 50 — was submitted this year, and the highest number of guests — 1,000 — purchased tickets.

The Nov. 16 fundraiser might break another record if Chairwoman Nicole Stelzer's $300,000 goal is met.

"All signs are pointing to a sold-out and successful event," Stelzer said.

The luncheon showcases female philanthropy in Boca Raton and beyond by recognizing those who work in all areas of charity — from arts and sciences to disease and hunger to child advocacy.

"It really is a representation of our community and what our community deems as areas of concern," Stelzer said.

Each of the nominees will be recognized onstage with an introduction and a plaque. Among them, a winner will be selected and presented with a gold pin.

"I think that the women, just for being nominated by one of their organizations, that is a truly special moment for them," league President Renata Sans de Negri said. "Our mission is to celebrate all the women who are committed to volunteerism in our community."

The event begins at 10 a.m. with a reception and silent auction, continues with the luncheon and fashion show at 11:30 a.m. and concludes with an after-party at 2 p.m. that runs into the early-evening hours.

"Last year, I was there until 5 p.m., believe it or not, and I was not the last to leave," de Negri said. "Many of our guests, they do take the Friday off. They really make it a full-day event."

The fashion show features couture by Tanya Taylor, who will attend and be available for a meet and greet with Runway VIP ticket holders. Saks Fifth Avenue sponsors the full-scale production.

"We let Saks Fifth Avenue bring the magic," de Negri said. "It's like a true New York Fashion Week coming into Boca Raton."★

VA Medical Center, West Palm Beach — Oct. 5

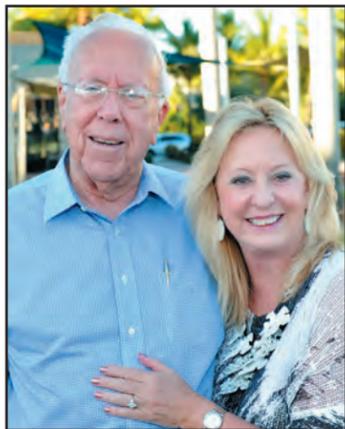

Men and women who served in the U.S. military dating back to World War II were treated to a show by music legend Tony Orlando in recognition of the National Day of Honor for American Veterans Disabled for Life. The world-famous USO Show Troupe, the Palm Beach Symphony and the Dreyfoos School of the Arts choir also performed. The Oct. 5 date has special meaning for disabled veterans in America, because on that day in 2014, the American Veterans Disabled for Life Memorial was dedicated in Washington, D.C. It was conceived by Lois Pope, who heads the Lois Pope LIFE Foundation.

A Magical Night to Fight Hunger

Downtown at Gardens, Palm Beach Gardens — Sept. 27

Palm Beach County Food Bank supporters had a common goal of making hunger disappear as they gathered for an evening benefit that helped more children, seniors and families have nutritious meals on their tables. The benefit featured a progressive, three-course dinner, a strolling magician and magic tricks, and it closed out efforts for Hunger Action Month. Food Bank Executive Director Karen Erren said a shortfall of nearly 55 million pounds of food exists between what is needed and what is available in the county.

The Smith brothers, Alex and Eric, who brought to town Ouzo Bay in Boca's Plaza Real, are at it again with their new Loch Bar.

Under their Atlas Restaurant Group umbrella, they are set to open Loch Bar this month in Mizner Park in the old Gigi's spot. It's a seafood concept with large raw bar and nightly entertainment, and the first of several planned outside of Baltimore in their home state.

Eric Smith spoke about choosing Boca Raton for the bar and the company's plans for other concepts in South Florida.

"We're very familiar with the area," he said. "Our family had a house in South Florida in the Boynton Beach area for 25 years, and as children we grew up spending a lot of time vacationing down there."

When it came time for the duo to expand, they looked to places they knew. "We used to go to Mizner Park all the time," Eric said. "We knew it was a thriving market."

A number of closures there have not scared them off.

"We saw there was a dip in the market right now and it's a great opportunity to get involved so that when it comes back up, we're right in the swing of things."

"We think Mizner's going through a renaissance in a very positive way. A lot of the older retailers are working their way out" with "new, fresh tenants" taking their places, Eric Smith said.

"We think we're the start of the F & B (food and beverage) change in Mizner Park."

The restaurant will be an upscale seafood bar with a large raw bar and a whiskey-forward bar program.

"We'll start with 350 whiskeys," Smith said. Because they're produced like wine, with limited releases after aging, it takes several years to accumulate a 500-bottle list — their goal, he said.

A majority of the foods on the menu will be tweaked to include local products. "We mix in a handful of our traditional Maryland seafood dishes — i.e. crab cakes, oyster po' boy sandwiches — stuff like that.

But the majority of the raw products will be local," Eric said.

Red snapper, grouper, mahi and other local fishes will be featured in the dishes already on the Baltimore menu.

A stone crab night on Mondays with a fixed-price meal, $79 to include appetizer and dessert, will replace the one that fans of Truluck's came out for before its Mizner location closed this year, he said.

The audience skews older than at the company's Baltimore outlets — they have eight already successful concepts in and around Baltimore harbor.

Smith said it's changing down here, however, with all the new development in residential space as well as hotel and retail real estate going in.

The publicist for the group, Kristen Skladd of the Gab Group, said new, younger professionals are attracted by the modern rental properties popping up in east and central Boca in particular. They are coming up from Miami and from out of state from the Northeast and California, she said.

"It's an opportune time for catering to the newbies," she said.

They will cater to locals first, then tourists, Smith said.

"Our job and our mission for all of our concepts across the country is not to get the tourist business, but to understand the locals and become a part of the community, and that's been our focus in Boca," he said.

The Smiths have hired Laura Huron and Brian Bagley, long-timers from the Dennis Max restaurants, to help them navigate and provide community links to the new restaurant.

"We want local faces and we want to establish a local clientele," Eric Smith said.

Live entertainment nightly will be set for the patrons, he said. "It will be acoustic, background noise and not in-your-face rock 'n' roll. It's not going to be loud, jam-it-out style." He said it's been successful in all other venues they've used it.

Kerry McCabe, formerly of the Dubliner and Kapow restaurants in Mizner, heads up the cocktail program. Signature frozen drinks from the Maryland restaurant will be featured here, especially the "Crush" — a fresh squeezed citrus and vodka drink served over crushed ice, sometimes with a champagne topper. "It's perfect for the warm weather," Smith said.

The Smith brothers group began in Baltimore with older brother Alex buying a Häagen-Dazs franchise while still in college. At age 21, he bought a deli in Harbor East, and succeeded with $2 million profits in one year, laying the groundwork for a career as a restaurateur.

Eric joined his brother in Ouzo Bay, a new concept from the Smiths in Baltimore in 2014, then became a partner in the new family business: Atlas Restaurant Group. One opened in Mizner Park in 2017 in the former Jazziz space.

Expansion plans are bold: Several more concepts from Baltimore's successful group are being floated for South Florida and nationwide, Eric said.

Next up will be a Loch Bar in Houston, set to open in January, but Smith hinted there may be one more concept coming to Mizner or somewhere else in Boca before year's end.

"We're constantly looking," he said.

Loch Bar will be at 346 Plaza Real and is expected to open in mid-November.

In brief

The iconic Banana Boat on the Intracoastal Waterway and Ocean Avenue in Boynton Beach is celebrating its 40th anniversary Nov. 8-11.

The Therien family owns the popular restaurant along with another eatery on the Intracoastal Waterway in Boynton Beach, Prime Catch.

"Many people in the Boynton area don't realize that between Banana Boat and Prime Catch, we employ over 210 employees, of which about 150 are full-time," says Luke Therien, who began working at the restaurant in 1996. His older brother, Pierre, and younger brother, Gilles, have been with the restaurant since it opened on Nov. 9, 1978.

Crazy Uncle Mike's is now open in Boca Raton. The brewery/lounge/music hall with upscale eats is raising eyebrows with its prices, starting with $9 drafts and gourmet-priced sandwiches. House-made, all scratch, of course. Don't look for burgers and tacos and such: Roasted cauliflower and broccoli are not your average bar fare. Acoustics aren't, we hear, just right yet. Or maybe they're going for that ear-splitting, concrete floor bounced sound. Judge for yourself — they will tweak as they go along. It's at 6450 N. Federal Highway, Boca Raton; phone 931-2889.

A new taco spot created by two Wellington restaurateurs has opened off Powerline Road in Boca Raton: Don Chepo's Taco Shop came into the mix mid-October after first opening in Wellington at the mall. Fashion Cuisine co-partners Dustin Parfitt and Juan Gando came up with the casual, fresh taqueria and with its western county success, came south. It's at 6897 SW 18th St., Boca Raton, and is open till 2 a.m. on weekends.

The Price: $7
The Skinny: I was starving. But I had dinner plans in a few hours. What was I to do? I started to grab a snack at the neighboring Chipotle, then decided to check out Tucker Duke's, which specializes in locally sourced, seasonal foods.

The menu offers a range of burgers and what I'd call bar foods-plus — fried green tomatoes, mini corn dogs, smoked wings, onion rings.

I opted for the egg rolls, which were filled with diced buffalo chicken, celery, onion and cheddar, then deep fried and served with a creamy avocado ranch dressing on the side.

They were hot but not greasy, and the chicken was moist and tender.

Toledo scales (right rear) first appeared at Publix in 1940, and Publix bought and stored as many of them as it could when the manufacturer discontinued Model No. 2830 in 2015. Photo provided

In those days, most folks didn't have bathroom scales at home, Jenkins reasoned, and public scales usually charged a penny. His were free, instantly popular, and every Publix has had a Toledo scale ever since.

"Where Shopping Is a Pleasure" didn't become the Publix motto until 1954, when Bill Schroter, the company's advertising director, dreamed up the slogan, but Publix has had a bright green color scheme right from the start.

"Why green?" Jenkins once said. "Because A&P used red."

Jenkins died in 1996, but the original Publix scales are still kept in his former office at the company's headquarters in Lakeland, and they still work.

The last A&P supermarket closed in 2015, but Publix is still green, and getting greener. Since the Manalapan store opened Aug. 16, another nine Publix supermarkets have debuted, most in Florida, reports Nicole Krauss, the Miami division's communications manager.

Publix opens about 40 new stores every year, and every one has a Toledo scale, Model No.

2830, near the front doors.

Rinderknecht, the Manalapan manager, notes that every time the U.S. Department of Agriculture stops by a Publix store to calibrate the scales back in the produce department, they calibrate the "people weighers," too.

But yes, the Publix scales do get a workout. The cashiers see it daily.

"We have kids who dance on it," says Gayle Steventon, working Express Lane No. 5, just across from the scales.

"They get up on them and dance, and get off and jump back on and, 'Oh, look at my numbers!'"

The scales don't service only human beings, either.

"Some people will come in the night before a trip and weigh their luggage to make sure they don't go over the airline's weight allowance," Rinderknecht says.

Luggage doesn't worry about its weight, but when it comes to self-image, perception is not always reality. At the Publix in the Fifth Avenue Shops on Federal Highway in Boca Raton, Ann Hankel stepped off the scales in disbelief.

"It must be way off because I'm not that fat," she muttered to no one in particular.

Hankel weighs herself every time she's in the store because she doesn't have a scale at home.

"When I was 20 pounds lighter, I felt fat, and now I'm heavier, I feel lighter," she said with a bemused smile. "I like Publix, but I should weigh myself before I buy the bread and doughnuts."

Cashier Patti Gamble has found an approach that works for her.

"I used to weigh 300 pounds," she says — though it's hard to believe today. "I'm a lot lower than that now, but I don't want to see what I weigh, so sometimes I stand on the scales backward, so I can't see what it says."

And not everyone who steps off the scales disheartened is overweight.

Lantana's David Smith weighs himself in Manalapan. He checks his weight every visit. Photos by Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

Carlos Ballbe steps on the scale in the Publix at Boca Raton's Fifth Avenue Shops. He says he wants to gain weight.

"I'm trying to gain weight," he said. "I need muscle mass. I gain and lose 2 or 3 pounds here or there, but I fell off my bike and haven't been able to work out, so it was down 3 pounds.

"The most I've ever weighed

A Publix store without Toledo scales up front? It's unthinkable. But not impossible.

In 2015, the same year A&P closed its last store, the Mettler Toledo Co. stopped making Model No. 2830. Publix bought many of the remaining scales and stored them in a Florida warehouse.

"As stores have closed, we stored the scales so they can be placed in new stores," Krauss says. "I don't think there's a large stockpile of them, but we should have enough to keep them in rotation for a while."

So, put down the chicken, the subs and the doughnuts. Step right up and be prepared to smile if you like what you see, or shout "Holy Toledo!" if you don't.

Valerie Pullman works in the deli at Manalapan, and she's seen it all.

"I'm from the Bronx, and I find it hard to believe," she exclaims. "They're getting ice cream and cake and then they get on the scales and get a little sad. Why would you do that to yourself?"

"I say don't not get the sub. Just don't get on the scales!" ★

Award-winning singer/actress
Rachel Bay Jones returns

Boca Raton-raised Rachel Bay Jones, a 2017 Tony and Grammy Award winner for her featured role as Heidi Hansen, mother of a teenage son whose social media lie goes viral in the smash hit musical Dear Evan Hansen, had long been ambivalent about forging a theater career in New York.

"I'm a Florida girl. I love nature, I love being out in the sunshine. Living in a gray city — which is what it felt like to me — I kept asking myself, 'What the hell am I doing here? What's going on?'" she says by phone from the city she has learned to embrace. "So I would move to a lot of really beautiful places with some beautiful people and do some great stuff and then keep coming back (to New York).

"Because I think, ultimately, the big dream of my life was just to be able to support myself doing theater and to do work that felt meaningful to me and work with actors and artists who I held in high esteem. It was never about winning an award and making a lot of money and wearing the pretty dresses — all of that stuff."

But the awards, the money and the dresses are now a part of her life as Jones, 48, is poised for more widespread visibility, with a recurring role in the new CBS television series God Friended Me and a featured part in a Julia Roberts film, Ben Is Back, due to be released this December. Next, though, she returns to South Florida on Nov. 17 for a solo concert at the Maltz Jupiter Theatre.

Jones' parents were both Shakespearean actors who were not about to discourage their daughter when she showed an interest in the stage at a young age. "I wish they'd tried a little harder to steer me away from it," she now says with a tiny throaty laugh. "I was never really ever

Big Medizen: All this and 'The Last Waltz' too

By Bill Meredith
ArtsPaper Music Writer

As a veteran area singer, guitarist and songwriter, Boynton Beach-based Jerry Leeman has learned the secrets that are mostly unique to South Florida musical success.

He has secondary income — especially important during non-seasonal months when paying jobs tend to fade here — as a yoga instructor. He plays acoustic guitar, which helps in the era of local volume restrictions. And he's learned that themed tribute shows often get more attention than standard ones — whether they feature cover tunes, originals or both — in area clubs, restaurants and concert halls.

That's a trend he's helped nurture. Since 2002, Leeman has produced, directed and appeared in impressive, multiple live area presentations of The Last Waltz, director Martin Scorsese's 1978 documentary of the farewell concert by The Band. And his current group, Big Medizen, has the talent to not only regularly salute The Band, but also a few other rock 'n' roll institutions.

The five- to 10-piece Big Medizen is the largest ensemble within Leeman's itinerary, since he's also learned that playing shows with smaller lineups — down to solo performances, which often pay nearly as much as full-band gigs — allows a singing acoustic guitarist to actually make a living playing music in this area.

"I'm averaging five to seven nights a week," says Leeman, who recently played separate unaccompanied gigs in Boynton Beach and Boca Raton on the same weeknight. "Solo shows, duos, trios and full band sets. And I teach yoga on Monday and Wednesday nights at Simply Yoga of Delray Beach."

at Rudy's in Lake Worth, in preparation for the band's Halloween re-creation of Pink Floyd's classic 1973 album Dark Side of the Moon, retitled "Dark Side of the Medizen," at Terra Fermata in Stuart. An expanded Big Medizen lineup for the challenge includes the nucleus of Leeman, guitarist/vocalists Mike Hill and Shaun Rosario, bassist/vocalist Kenneth Gruneisen and drummer/vocalist Pat Kregor, along with keyboardists Bob Taylor and Tony Tata and saxophonist Dave Kupsick.

Taylor, on organ, and Tata, on electric piano, combined to re-create the parts of Pink Floyd's underrated keyboardist Richard Wright (1943-2008) on Breathe, and Kupsick reenacted Dick Parry's memorable solo on the hit Money. Kregor used additional conga and bongo drums to play drummer Nick Mason's early accents on Time, also featuring Hill's David Gilmour impersonation, with both his searing solos and spot-on backing vocals.

Gruneisen, on an acoustic bass guitar, held down the instrumental element of bassist/vocalist Roger Waters while Leeman effortlessly nailed his lead vocals on all three tunes. In the absence of a female vocalist, the band leader even went falsetto to approximate vocalist Clare Torry's soaring, wordless passages on The Great Gig in the Sky.

Rosario, at age 30 the group's youngest member by far, stuck to rhythm guitar and minimal backing vocals throughout. But on Big Medizen shows featuring Grateful Dead material, it's his chemistry with Leeman that drives that seminal jam band's timeless tracks. Which underscores how amoebic Big Medizen can be, with either Rosario or Hill — a musician versatile enough to have been the second of three bassists with Inhouse during that popular West Palm Beach band's area rise between 1994 and 1999 — playing Leeman's primary foil on any given night.

And lest one think that Big Medizen plays only other people's music, it has a forthcoming vinyl album of 11 tracks called Eleven.

"I'm getting so many calls to book Big Medizen now," says Leeman. "We've done Woodstock anniversary shows, Dylan and the Dead shows, and we have another presentation of The Last Waltz coming up."

For that show on the night before Thanksgiving, Rosario will abandon his jazzy, woven, Jerry Garcia-inspired lines and cut loose while portraying bluesy rocker Eric Clapton, while Hill will channel his inner folkie as Bob Dylan. Leeman will play multiple roles including Van Morrison, Neil Diamond, and Muddy Waters.

"The Pink Floyd material is really fun," says the seemingly ever-smiling Rosario, "but I'm really looking forward to The Last Waltz."

Always in search of an encore, Leeman pulls out an intriguing possibility when asked what comes afterward.

"I'm thinking of doing the White Album," he says of the masterful, self-titled 1968 double album by The Beatles. "It's 30 songs, and I figure that if we can pull all of that off, there isn't much we couldn't do."

sure that that was what I wanted to be. It was sort of that the ball kept rolling. I kept working and in many ways it saved my life; to have that outlet when you're a teenager meant so much. But I cursed them for a lot of years for getting me into this."

Noticing that there was a part for a little girl in a play her mother was auditioning for, Jones went with her to Jan McArt's Royal Palm Dinner Theatre and made her professional debut in Anniversary Waltz, a minor '50s comedy. Later, she appeared in productions at Spanish River High School, eventually dropping out to take a role in a local stage show. Before long, she was on Broadway, understudying at age 19 in the musical Meet Me in St. Louis, followed by a national tour of Grand Hotel.

But after doing several regional theater roles, Jones went through what she calls "that great long period of questioning — is this really what I want to do with my life? I sort of woke up in my early 20s with, 'Oh, wait. I never really wanted to be an actor.'"

"I was always very introverted. Being onstage was a different thing, and the interaction with the world of show business outside of what's going on on the stage was always very difficult for me. And in some ways it still is. So I left the business."

But never for long. Jones moved back to South Florida and was soon appearing at the Pope Theatre, the Caldwell and Actors' Playhouse in Coral Gables, all while trying to figure out what to do with her life.

Eventually, she decided to try New York again and, after a long stretch of unemployment, scored an audition with director Diane Paulus, who cast her in the 2009 revival of the rock musical Hair. More important, Paulus encouraged her to try out for the role of the widow Catherine in her version of Pippin, reconceived inside a circus tent.

"And it's a part that is usually played by a much younger woman," notes Jones. "I was already in my 40s at the time, but she asked me to come in and audition for this ingenue part, Pippin's love interest. At first, I passed on the audition. I said, 'No, I can't, I'm all wrong for it.'"

"But she asked again and I felt like that was pretty stupid to keep turning down one of the best directors in the world. So I thought of the character as this actress who has been playing this ingenue role for a very long time. Therefore, she can be 42 years old playing a woman in her 20s."

Unlike many in the cast, Jones had no circus skills. "But I said, 'How about if I'm a clown?' So we made this character part of the troupe by having her be a clown. I asked for a tiny little tricycle that I could ride and we peppered that through the first act with a few other clown bits."

The revival was a hit and so was Jones.

Earlier, she had been in a tour of A Christmas Story, with a score by a young, promising songwriting team of Benj Pasek and Justin Paul. They, like Paulus, were impressed by Jones and sought her out for their next project. "I got a call to come in and do a private reading — just for the authors — of this untitled musical," she recalls. "And it turned out to be Dear Evan Hansen."

The lesson? "If you stick around the people you love to work with, those things tend to come around again."

Unlike so many musicals these days that are adaptations of popular films, Dear Evan Hansen was a completely original show, not based on any existing story. That made its long evolutionary journey to Broadway particularly challenging.

"I've likened it to the Wild West," says Jones, who was involved since the first developmental reading. "There were no rules, there was no source material, so everything was a 'yes.' There were things that were wild and didn't work and there were things that were wild and did work and they stuck. But at its heart, it's the same show that was at that first table read."

The show's developmental process was very collaborative, emphasizes Jones. Pasek and Paul "were very respectful of allowing my voice as Rachel, a middle-aged mother of a teenager, to be heard in the process of creating this character. They were very respectful that what I felt was important, what I wanted to say as an artist and as a mother, stayed in the story."

From her first exposure to the material, Jones sensed that Dear Evan Hansen was something special, with a unique ability to connect with audiences. "I think we all did from the second that we opened that script. We weren't told what it was, we weren't allowed to take a peek in the book 'til we got there," she recalls. "They just said, 'And now, open your books and read.' And we did. And everyone in the room that day was a little bit floored."

From that day on, Jones and most of the original cast cleared their schedules to remain with the Evan Hansen project — from its initial production in Washington at Arena Stage to its off-Broadway run at Second Stage, to Broadway. "We turned down a lot of more lucrative work to stick with this project," she says. "It wasn't so much feeling that one day this will pay off in any kind of a financial way or a career-building way, it was the material which was representative of the whole reason why we do what we do in the first place."

Arguably, Jones won her Tony for singing her 11 o'clock solo, So Big, So Small, which brought the audience to tears nightly. "I never was able to do it without choking up myself," Jones concedes. "While it was important for me to be present with the grief that's inherent in that song, and to allow Evan to see that, I had to make sure that he knew that despite my grief and my asking him for forgiveness, that he knew that I was strong enough to be there for him."

Asked about the night she won her Tony, Jones talks about it as an emotional roller coaster. "Because I told you I'm a little bit of an introvert, I'm shy. I was the most scared I can ever remember. I was 'Don't call me. Don't call me, don't call me. No, no, no, no, no.' Because I didn't want to get up there. It's the most terrifying thing. It was not sane, but it was real, y'know?" Ultimately, though, "It was awesome. It was so much fun."

She predicts that the Maltz concert will be a similar joy. "It's something I've been thinking about for a long time. We've been trying it out a couple of times in other cities, but looking towards this concert at the Maltz to have it fully fleshed out," she says. "So we've been previewing it, you could say, to get ready for Jupiter."

"I picked songs I always wanted to sing," Jones offers. "What connects these songs, why do I want to sing them so much? I think it's just because they all have stories that feel resonant to me and my journey up until this point. It's everything from a Lyle Lovett country song about wishing I had a pony and a boat to songs from Hair and songs that I've done in other shows. And some beautiful jazz standards that are meaningful to me." And yes, be prepared with Kleenex: She will be singing So Big, So Small.

Numerous opportunities in many show business avenues are opening for Rachel Bay Jones, but she feels certain she will soon be back performing theater.

"I haven't been successful at staying away from it for very long really," she says with another throaty laugh.

'Downton Abbey' settles into CityPlace for the season

By Jan Engoren
Contributing Writer

Anglophiles and fans of the PBS series Downton Abbey, wait no longer: The characters, the costumes, the Old World glamour and melodrama are arriving in South Florida in time for season.

Just off a successful New York City run, NBCUniversal International Studios, along with Imagine Exhibitions, is bringing Downton Abbey: The Exhibition to CityPlace in West Palm Beach, opening Nov. 10 and running through April.

Included in the interactive exhibition are never-before-seen elements and exclusive footage, more than 60 original costumes (including six wedding dresses, worn by sisters Mary and Edith), hunting garments, day and evening wear, hats, period jewelry, furniture, flatware, dishes, and more from the series, as well as a complete re-creation of the servant's quarters below and the household above.

"This iteration is even bigger and better than the New York tour," said Tom Zaller, CEO of Imagine Exhibitions, who was on site putting the finishing touches on the interactive exhibit in mid-October.

Although he declined to give the actual number of attendees for the New York tour, he did say it was an "overwhelming success."

"This is an opportunity for fans to take a walk down memory lane," noted Zaller, who admits he watched the show and was on board immediately after learning of the prospect of creating a traveling exhibit, something he has done for other large shows.

"The fans want more. After six seasons, the viewers are attached to this family and their lives. They're invested," he said. "Having it come to an end, leaves them wanting more, more, more and we're giving them more, more, more."

By mid-October, the exhibit was 95 percent up and running, lacking only the gift shop, which Zaller promises will be fully stocked by opening night.

The historical drama, created by Carnival Films and PBS and set between 1912-26 during the reign of King George V, ran six seasons on Masterpiece on PBS from 2010 to 2015, and occupied many a fan's Sunday night. Written and created by Julian Fellowes, the show reached more than 26 million viewers in its final season in the U.S. With 15 wins and 69 nominations, it is the most nominated non-U.S. show in the history of the Emmy Awards.

Zaller stresses the positive working relationship between Imagine and NBCUniversal, which made it possible to have the actors reprise their roles to create hologram introductions for the exhibit and for Fellowes to write the introduction.

With a combination of CGI and actual footage from the shows, Mr. Carson (the butler) and Mrs. Hughes (the housekeeper) extend their warm wishes to visitors, and Lord and Lady Grantham welcome you to their manor, saying, "We will teach you a thing or two about romance and laughter."

The storyline hinged on real-life events. The Crawleys/Granthams live through the sinking of the Titanic; the outbreak of World War I and the impact it had on their privileged lives; the advent of technology and voting rights for women; the beginning acceptance of homosexuality; the tension between new money and old; the changing roles of the aristocracy, and a vanishing way of life.

The series provided a glimpse into the manners, mores and affectations of the upper crust of English society — an escape fantasy for American viewers.

can wander by Mrs. Patmore's kitchen (just as she left it in the last episode) with its elongated butcher block table, the iconic copper kettle featured in the opening credits, the sounds of a bustling kitchen and the scent of baked goods wafting into the air.

The exhibit is fanatically detailed; visitors can stop and read for themselves the letter Lord Grantham received about his nephew's fateful crossing on the Titanic. One of Zaller's favorite pieces of memorabilia is Lady Mary Crawley's vintage metallic lace, sea foam satin gown with deco-rose motif and a cascading hemline.

The family dining room is as ornate and lavish as you remember, and the servant's quarters feature the original bell board, from which the lord and lady summoned their help. Lady Mary's bedroom — the site of many memorable scenes (including the seduction scene with Kemal Pamuk) — is as it was: replete with Persian carpet, sleigh bed, and the wooden vanity where Anna Bates, her lady's maid, curled her hair and shared her confidences.

In addition to the re-created rooms and vignettes, there are interactive panels where you can take a quiz to see whether you'd qualify for a position at Downton Abbey, listen to the dowager countess (played by Dame Maggie Smith) on a candlestick telephone, discover personal trinkets in drawers or pick up a handset to learn more about the history of the era.

"Thanks to the support from NBCUniversal, we are able to bring a unique execution and an extraordinary experience of Downton Abbey to its fans," Zaller said. "We hope fans will laugh and cry, reconnect and reminisce and get a piece of their favorite show back."

The Crawley lineage, representing the family's long history and traditions, and the triumphs and tribulations of its extended relations are all intriguing elements to egalitarian American audiences. Whether it would have been a smash in the U.S., without the English accents and pretensions of the British upper class with its class distinctions, rituals and formalities, is speculative.

Here are edited reviews of current shows. For the full reviews, please visit palmbeachartspaper.com.

Indecent (Palm Beach Dramaworks, through Nov. 11)

Indecent is both the title of Paula Vogel's impressionistic chronicle of a 1907 melodrama by novice playwright Sholem Asch, and the critical and legal opinion of the work once it arrived on Broadway in the early 1920s.

While Vogel's play serves as a production history of Asch's God of Vengeance, it is also much more — a portrait of survival of a piece of theater under siege and the very survival of the Jewish people and their culture, caught in the crosshairs of genocide.

Although the story is epic, it is related by a cast of only seven, accompanied by a tiny klezmer band of three musicians. Gray of countenance with streams of ash pouring out of their clothes sleeves, the actors are brought back to life to tell the story of God of Vengeance.

Far ahead of his time, Asch broke considerable theatrical ground with his first play, which humanizes its Jewish characters with frailties and flaws, as well as depicting a lesbian couple who engage in what is considered to be the first ever same-sex onstage kiss. Yet the Yiddish-language God of Vengeance played — and was acclaimed and accepted — throughout Europe, and even in New York's Lower East Side. It is when it reaches for the legitimacy of Broadway, with an English translation and that female kissing scene deleted, that the production is halted by the police and the performers arrested for public indecency.

The skeletal, yet complex script is brought to vibrant life in Palm Beach Dramaworks' season opener by director J. Barry Lewis, aided by choreographer/associate director Lynnette Barkley and an A-team of designers.

Rather than offer a condensed version of God of Vengeance, Vogel presents us with a montage of the play's final sequence — an enraged Orthodox Jewish brothel owner, Yekel, hurling a Torah scroll down on his rebellious daughter, Rifkele. And eventually, the playwright lets us see that infamous kiss between Rifkele and her prostitute-lover.

With the exception of Lemml (Jay Russell), the rookie stage manager who becomes God of Vengeance's staunchest advocate, the cast keeps morphing into a variety of characters. The result is a textbook example of a performance ensemble. Still, there are standouts in the company, including Cliff Burgess as the earnest Asch, Mark Jacoby as the troupe's venerable impresario, Rudolph Schildkraut, and Dani Marcus and Kathleen Wise as the lovers, onstage and off.

In what could well be Dramaworks' most ambitious season yet, with a world premiere, a musical, a Pulitzer Prize winner and an unabashed comedy, Indecent demonstrates how the company is up to whatever challenges it gives itself. — Hap Erstein

The Oath (opened Oct. 19)

Comedian Ike Barinholtz's directorial debut is easily the most confrontational, nerve-rattling missive to come out of Hollywood in the Trump era, without ever mentioning the man's name. It's so provocative, in fact, that it's a miracle it was even greenlit.

On a March day, Chris (Barinholtz) and his wife, Kai (Tiffany Haddish), are sitting on their bed, watching a news conference with expressions that alternate between puzzlement and concern. The White House press secretary has unveiled the fictional administration's latest attempt to keep the nation's restive population in line: a loyalty pledge to the Dear Leader. An oath, if you will.

Signing such a document is not mandatory, but those who do sign it will receive government perks, such as tax incentives. The deadline to sign is, ominously, Black Friday, the day after Thanksgiving, less than a year away. Chris and Kai, proud members of the Resistance with an impressionable daughter to inspire, swear they'll never sign.

The rest of this exceedingly uncomfortable nightmare takes place Thanksgiving week, where the nation's temperature, like that frog in the famous analogy, is reaching a rapid boil. Progressive figureheads are being disappeared; civil rights leaders in Congress are being hauled away in cuffs; protesters are being sprayed with bullets.

meal that includes Chris' preppy conservative brother, Pat (Jon Barinholtz) and Pat's alt-right girlfriend, Abbie (Meredith Hagner); and his parents, Eleanor and Hank (Nora Dunn and Chris Ellis), family-values traditionalists who would prefer to avoid talk of "politics" at the dinner table.

Inevitably, opinions are divulged, invectives hurled, regrettable sentiments not-quite taken back. But it's not until two mirthless government agents (Billy Magnussen and John Cho) come knocking that the true horror ensues — and it doesn't let up until the denouement.

The Oath raises many issues relevant to the zeitgeist. But mostly, the film is a warning about what a police state might look like in Trump's America, when everybody's on edge, ideological divisions couldn't be starker, and literally turning in one's brother is an act of patriotism. — ArtsPaper staff

The cut-and-paste life, on full display

By Gretel Sarmiento
ArtsPaper Art Writer

Paint some sheets of paper. Grab a pair of scissors. Arrange the colorful strips. What do you get? A day in the life of a New Yorker — or anyone residing in a metropolis for that matter.

Paper cutouts have been masterfully arranged to bring forward the dynamic pace of city life in a new exhibit featuring vehicles caught in traffic, pedestrians rushing down steps, and busy intersections. Like stray dogs confused not long ago, but now responding on command, the puzzle pieces assemble, form ears, haircuts and gestures. Each is absolutely indispensable to the fleeing moments in David Kapp: Crossing the Grid, on view at the Ann Norton Sculpture Gardens through Dec. 9.

Born in 1953, Kapp is known for contemporary renditions of street landscapes that are not devoid of chaos and challenges. His ribbons of paper re-create the daily drama caught between a city's sky and its pavement. Although his body of work includes oil paintings, and some are featured here, Kapp's collages are what this show is about. At times, it is hard to reconcile the playful outcomes, such as the multicolored Stadium II, with the highly calculative execution driving them.

Just as any modern concrete jungle, Crossing the Grid exhibits mood swings. Wall Street Looking Up III (2014) projects a somber, stoic picture of power, silence and solitude. The rigid buildings composed of dark strips tower over pedestrians presumably looking to catch a glimpse of that soothing lavender sky. The work is 25 x 17 inches and struggles to contain the ultra-modern twin structures that threaten to squeeze those standing in the middle. It has very little in common with two other collages from that same year.

Vibrant hues and crowds contribute to the highly energetic current in Summer Crowd and Green Crowd and Traffic. As with most pieces in the exhibit, the best way to appreciate them is from a distance. Only then do the irregular shapes of paper harmonize and reveal what their secret dance is all about.

The same goes for Kapp's oil paintings. A darker shape defies a dull, colorless background in a square panel titled Cyclist III. It remains undecipherable until we take a few steps back. The small gallery room housing this 2008 piece affords just enough space to do so. Before our eyes, the figure sharpens. Its motion earns definition and those circles are no longer accents in an abstract geometric composition. Meet the protagonist: the rider.

Another way to look is to stand as close as you can. Focus on a spot and ignore the surrounding noise. There, you will find signs of abstract expressionism like beautiful parasites living off an organism. This is one of two surprises Crossing the Grid offers.

There are no accidents here. Whether they serve to convey movement or silhouettes, every shape has a role to play, even if it is as a handrail, as in the Coming into the Subway series depicting soon-to-be passengers drifting down the steps dressed in dark, open overcoats. The angle setting the stage for an inevitable encounter, the precipitating pose, and that floating quality of the fabric, make them special.

It might be tempting to assume it was easy for the New York City native to put this cut-and-pasted world together. At first glance, the works appear simple and light; the products of a child's busy afternoon and the prelude to a household chore.

If You Go

David Kapp: Crossing the Grid runs through Dec. 9 at the Ann Norton Sculpture Gardens, 253 Barcelona Road, West Palm Beach.
Hours: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday to Sunday
Admission: $15, $10 seniors, $7 students and children
Info: 832-5328 or ansg.org

After all, the headlights in 4 Cars — from 2013 — look as if ripped with bare hands, and don't feature the clean, straight cut afforded by a sharp tool and awarded to other pieces. A warm orange tone divides the bottom half from the top, which is darker and features a blue and a yellow vehicle. A black cutout standing in for a shadow emerges from under a set of front tires. Yellow scratches appear on the surface. Like scars of sorts, the marks portray a city that has switched off its charm and turned on the raw and the unforgiving.

Before attending Queens College and receiving a Creative Artists Public Service Fellowship in Painting and the Rosenthal Foundation Award, Kapp too, was a child. That his mature, grown-up persona manages to preserve a childish enthusiasm that generates artworks this straightforward, carefree and centered in the present moment is the other surprising factor.

It is tempting to judge his simple technique as a cheap shortcut toward a round of applause. But something must be said about the imaginative method and vision that can turn flat strips of paper into animated, vivid moments. The preconceived arrangement, the subtle restraint, and that intentional snapshot view all point in one direction: Don't try this at home.

An insider's guide to Art Basel and Art Week in Miami

By Sandra Schulman
ArtsPaper Art Writer

The biggest art event in Miami happens in December, when the world-class art circus that is Art Basel Miami rolls into the big-top Miami Beach Convention Center on Dec. 6-9. But there are also dozens of satellite fairs, outdoor sculpture exhibits, fair tents on the beach, parties and new shows in the museums that get started earlier in the week of Dec. 4-9, and are just some of the things that draw art-loving jet-setting hordes here.

There are some things to know before heading down to Miami — and you really should go; for all the perceived hassle, there is nothing like it in the world for a week. Traffic and parking are as bad as you may have heard and probably worse, but salvation has come in the form of the new Brightline train running from downtown West Palm to downtown Miami with a stop in Fort Lauderdale (gobrightline.com).

Things to bring: comfortable shoes, a light jacket for hyper-A/C venues, cash, credit cards and ID, a charged phone, an open mind and some patience.

As a bonus, the train cruises through the Wynwood Art District, allowing a rarely seen view of the murals and sculptural art installed on the railroad track back side — and there is lots of it for several blocks on the west side of the train. From the Miami station, which has cafés, shops and even condos being built in this new mini-city, you can take the free Metro Mover to downtown fairs like Art Miami and Context. A trolley service from Bayside can take you to the beach fairs. Any other destination can easily be accessed by Uber or Lyft.

Last year, I went event- and fair-hopping on Uber with a group of friends, and cars literally showed up in seconds after we booked rides with all fares handled direct through the app. With construction, limited expensive parking and highway hassles, this is a huge step in making the trip easy and fun.

When you go, it's a smart idea to plan at least few hours at each fair and map the location of the fairs to one another. Going to Art Basel Miami is a full day in itself as the new fair layout by Amsterdam-based firm Tom Postma Design will bring more exhibition space, larger booths and wider aisles — along with four entrances to the halls. There are hundreds of booths with the best art the world has to offer, special sections like Nova, Editions, Position, Kabinett, Survey — all specially curated booths to expand art exhibits. Latin American perspectives, Afro-Caribbean spirituality, and experimental painting mark this year's Galleries sector. Panels, conversations, film screenings on the wall of the nearby Soundscape Park and at the Colony Theater, along with people-watching, fill in the rest. Expect better food options and more places to relax this year as the Convention Center has installed a rooftop lounge and plaza area.

Multiple fairs dot the actual beach and along Collins Avenue — Design Miami, Aqua Art Fair, Ink Miami Art Fair, Muse, Pulse Contemporary, Scope, Superfine and Untitled. In addition many hotels host pop-up exhibits in their lobbies, particularly the elegant Deco Hotel Sagamore. Each fair has a slant of what kind of art it shows, so check the websites if you are looking for something particular. These are all pretty much within walking distance and again, Uber and trolleys can also get you anywhere.

A few must-see exhibits include the annual Public Sector sculpture installation in Collins Park in front of the Bass Museum — a wild and woolly lineup of huge, ambitious work. Past sculptures of a 50-foot deer, a roller coaster made of 25-cent kiddie rides, a drag queen disco, and a barbecue in the flaming trunk of a limo are some standouts. And it's free. If you get hungry, I suggest The Dutch in the nearby W Hotel, whose lobby contains work from Warhol, Kenny Scharf, Jean-Michel Basquiat, Mike Kelley, and Christopher Wool.

And the Faena complex of hotel, art forum and shops, on Collins Avenue in the mid-30s blocks, has the most beautiful mosaic hotel lobby in Miami and a gold-leafed, full-size mastodon skeleton by Damien Hirst out by the pool. More free-to-see mind-blowing art.

If that's not enough, a full day or two or three can be spent on the mainland. The downtown Arts and Entertainment District has Art Miami, Context, NADA and the Satellite Art Show. Art Miami has a huge beautiful tent right on the scenic Biscayne Bay where the Miami Herald newspaper offices stood for decades. In terms of quality and cutting-edge work, this is the fair to see, as the organizers also do the circuit in New York, the Hamptons and West Palm Beach. The tent connects to Context right next door so you can see two fairs in the same location.

"Art Week visitors can look forward to seeing the most important artworks from the 20th and 21st centuries, as well as never-before-seen pieces, dynamic projects, special installations, and more from more than 300 international galleries at our three fairs — Art Miami, Context Art Miami and Aqua Art Miami," says Art Miami Fair Director Nick Korniloff in an email. "Many of the exhibitors at Art Miami have shown at ADAA, Art Basel, The Armory Show, Design Basel TEFAF, Masterpiece London and EXPO Chicago, so our visitors can look forward to seeing an exceptional quality of artwork from blue-chip artists, modern masters, mid-career, emerging and cutting-edge artists.

"Art Miami alone will present more than 800 of the top blue-chip artists of the modern, post-war and pop eras as well as master works by artists including David Hockney, Pablo Picasso, Alexander Calder, Willem de Kooning and Roy Lichtenstein," Korniloff said.

Farther west are the Fridge Art Fair, Miami River Art Fair and Prizm, and Overtown now boasts Art Africa Fair.

Another full-day tour is well spent in Wynwood, where blocks and blocks of outdoor murals are a colorful show in itself. In addition to the well-curated murals at the Wynwood Walls Garden and Gallery, there are the creative word art gallery of Peter Tunney, and Wynwood Kitchen, where street artist-turned-global activist sensation Shepard Fairey has designed the walls and the server uniforms. Fairs in Wynwood include Pinta, Red Dot and Spectrum.

Emmy-winning designer Pat Fields brings her Art Fashion tribe to Wynwood for all of December, showcasing genre-bending artists in striking clothing. One of her artists, Daniel Chimowitz, has a one-man museum show at The Jewish Museum through February. The Rubell Family Collection is well worth a visit, as this art-centric mega-collector family is mainly responsible for bringing Art Basel Miami here to begin with, and they always refresh their mammoth collection annually to coincide with Art Fair Week.

For the best in world-class fashion and art head to the Design District, newly

Florida a rich character in author's mystery debut

The Other Side of Everything, by Lauren Doyle Owens. Touchstone, 272 pp., $15.99

By Sharon Geltner
Contributing Writer

"I was living through the worst time of my life. I was going to kill myself."

That statement is not from the west Broward County mystery The Other Side of Everything, the debut novel by Lauren Doyle Owens, a 10-year resident of the area. Instead, it's what the author said about her own life.

"I didn't kill myself," Doyle Owens said in a recent interview. "Instead, I wrote this story."

A native of the Baltimore suburb of Towson, Doyle Owens got a master's in fine arts from Florida International University, where she met her husband. She always wanted to be a writer but says she really had nothing worth saying as a young woman.

But a cancer diagnosis — including chemo treatments and a hysterectomy — at 29 provided the fodder she needed to explore these dark emotions.

"This book is about being lonely, depressed and living in isolation. It's about what it feels like to go through something and then break through to the other side," Doyle Owens said.

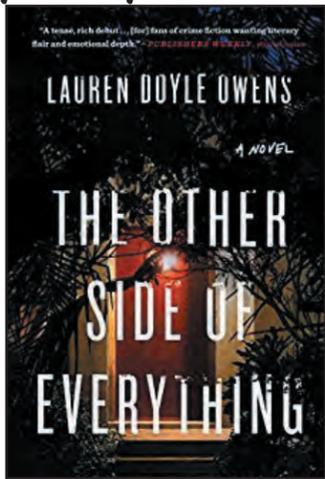

The book begins with the death of a lonely, elderly widow, her skull bashed in and her house torched. The plot revolves around her three neighbors, each of whom is frightened by the violence so close to home. One neighbor knew the victim almost 50 years, ever since they moved to the same development near the same time. The second is a 30-ish woman, a talented artist who has recovered from cancer, had a hysterectomy and is suffering through a rocky marriage and a growing drinking problem. She hasn't painted in three years.

The last is a 15-year-old girl whose mother recently abandoned her. She's waiting tables at a nearby diner and trying to figure out how to save what is left of her family.

Soon there are two more murders to solve. Someone is viciously using weapons improvised from common household objects. All of the victims are older women who live alone. Presumably, they do not have enemies.

Doyle Owens' book authentically describes the physical surroundings of a neighborhood built in the 1950s, in a rundown pocket in the "dense sprawl" between Miami and Fort Lauderdale. It also truthfully depicts the inner thoughts of people who are depressed, out of options and losing hope.

The action takes place in the fictional Seven Springs, Fla., in the aftermath of the Great Recession, when "the boarded-up pink houses had gone beige." Doyle Owens terms it "a creepy atmosphere."

In the book and in real life, residents are seniors who bought homes in the '50s, young married couples and struggling middle-aged parents and their teenage children.

The novel is true South Florida, right down to the amphibians and reptiles who thrive in the heat and humidity. As in, "A toad laid some eggs in my potting soil." Doyle Owens also compares green and brown lizards. And she writes, with chilling understatement, of the two-legged reptiles who prey on motherless teenage girls and elderly residents who struggle in quiet desperation in what is supposed to be a tropical paradise.

Doyle Owens is an engaging writer. She is very descriptive and chooses interesting details but never makes the mistake of overwhelming plot and dialogue with florid writing. She draws the reader into a realistic story with intriguing character dilemmas, apart from the murder mystery and the fear that the killer is still out there. She also gives her story depth and layers, with protagonists from three generations living close by but sometimes at odds with each other.

All of them live in a community where there are plenty of huge banyans to enjoy, but the sidewalks are cracked. And two weeks after the first murder, the yard stinks of rotting mangoes and is overgrown with weeds.

The writer deals with depression without making the reader want to drop the book in despair. There is a feeling that the characters will pull themselves out of the morass.

Doyle Owens' next book, Another Life, is about long lost sisters. Whether or not it takes place in South Florida, it should be well worth reading.

Sharon Geltner is the author of Charity Bashed, a Palm Beach mystery and social satire, available on Amazon.

Couple share experiences of addiction in books

Through Jasper's Eyes: My Weekend on Death Row, by John Lipscomb. Electio, 190 pp., $13.99

The Painting and The Piano, by John Lipscomb and Adrienne Lugo. ALJ Marketing, 328 pp. $15.50.

By Steve Pike

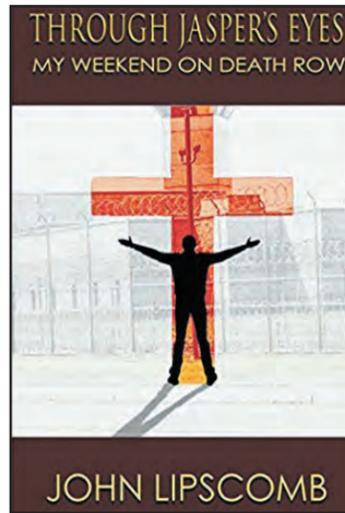

More than a decade removed, John Lipscomb could still hear the prison doors slam shut and the haunting "swoosh" of the airlock; still smell the unholy mix of disinfectant on the dining room floor and barely edible food.

Above all, Lipscomb could still hear Jasper's words: "Man, you got the saddest story I ever heard."

Those were powerful words, considering that Jasper was on Death Row at Missouri's Potosi Correctional Center.

A nondescript, small Missouri town, Potosi is far removed from Lipscomb's upper-crust childhood in the posh St. Louis suburb of Ladue. But as he interacted with inmates, Lipscomb knew his decisions and actions made early in his adult life could have landed him in Potosi as one of them.

Instead, he was there as a stranger to spread the gospel through the Catholic Church's Residents Encounter Christ program.

"I drove home drunk a thousand nights," said Lipscomb, who now lives with his wife, Adrienne Lugo, in Ocean Ridge.

The pair collaborated on Lipscomb's first book, The Painting and The Piano, which chronicles each of their battles with addiction.

In his second book, Through Jasper's Eyes: My Weekend on Death Row, Lipscomb details his 2006 visit to the prison and his opening up to inmates about multiple DUIs, lost marriages, lost children, lost businesses and lost houses.

"This is what addiction does to you," Lipscomb tells them, knowing that to a man, he was telling them what each already knew.

When he finished, he was approached by Jasper (a fictitious name), who had tears streaming down his face.

Lipscomb, who has been sober for nearly 20 years, used Jasper's words as the inspiration for his 190-page book, published by Electio.

"I think I got more out of it (than the inmates), but it's hard to say," Lipscomb said. "You can see the guys get a lot out of it when you're there through the smiles on their faces. It's just about one human being helping another."

And it's about some powerful words.
