Agents see no end to run on town's real estate with latest deals

By Jane Musgrave

Fueled largely by two well-known multibillionaires who have invested heavily in Manalapan in recent years, real estate sales in the tiny coastal town have broken local, state and even national records in recent months.

The latest eye-popping purchase came in June when WeatherTech founder David MacNeil plunked down $32 million and Oracle co-founder Larry Ellison agreed to pay $35 million to split a 4-acre ocean-to-Intracoastal lot that was to become home to one of the most expensive houses in the United States.

Former Manalapan Mayor Stewart Satter was the mastermind behind the idea of building a $285 million spec house on the land at 1960 S. Ocean Blvd. that he purchased in 2024 for $27.5 million.

Instead, the real estate entrepreneur abandoned plans to build a 50,000-square-foot custom-designed house and instead sold the lot for $67 million to the two business moguls, allowing them to become neighbors.

The new neighbors are both major supporters of President Donald Trump, who makes his home about eight miles north at Mar-a-Lago in Palm Beach. Trump nominated MacNeil to the Federal Trade Commission. Ellison has long been part of Trump's inner circle.

Satter declined comment on the sale because Ellison hadn't closed on his half of the property. But in the past, Satter has credited the real estate boom in

Looming property tax vote hints at big changes

Ballot measure putting more focus on spending issues

Difficult decisions could loom large on the horizon should a proposed state constitutional amendment reducing property taxes for a giant chunk of Florida homeowners be approved by 60% of voters in November.

Yes, local government leaders will have to make tough choices, but the ripple effect of those decisions could mean higher costs for everyone — from business owners and renters to even soccer moms who could face higher league registration fees for their children to participate.

Proponents of the amendment say it will be a blessing for homeowners facing higher insurance costs and other affordability issues. They also see it as reining in local governments, whose budgets

Waves of war: South Florida's brush with the Revolution

By Larry Barszewski

As America celebrates its 250th birthday, Palm Beach County residents wanting to visit a Revolutionary War battle site need only get in a boat and head a few miles offshore.

A historic naval battle, the last of the Revolution, took place there, though technically after the fighting had already ended.

There are no GPS coordinates for the March 10, 1783, encounter between the victorious USS Alliance and the defeated HMS Sybil. Such technology was more than a bicentennial celebration away.

The battle for years has been described as having taken place off the coast of Cape Canaveral. There's even a historical marker about the battle on nearby

Merritt Island, where the battle is celebrated.

But a decade ago, when Cape Canaveral's current staff historian went looking for additional information about the battle for an article she was writing, she found original navigational logs from the Alliance that showed the skirmish really took place between present-day West Palm Beach and Boca Raton.

"My article was not very well received by some of our local history organizations," historian Molly Thomas now admits, but she says the logs and other ship entries don't lie.

It appears the Cape Canaveral reference for the battle is a mix-up akin to the Revolutionary War misnomer of the Battle of Bunker Hill, which instead took place on Breed's Hill. It turns out Cape Canaveral was one of the few easily identifiable coastal reference points for voyagers sailing between St. Augustine and the Florida Keys, Thomas said.

"Even for the most enthusiastic local historian to say that this location (more than 140 miles to the southeast) is 'off the coast of Cape Canaveral,' seems a bit of a stretch," she wrote in her 2017 story in

The USS Alliance. Image provided

Brevard County's Indian River Journal, which detailed her research.

Given her findings, some have given the fight an alternate name: the Battle of the Gulf Stream.

Lantana preserve a natural cause for this Hypoluxo Island couple

By Mary Thurwachter

A presentation during the June 8 Lantana Town Council meeting turned the spotlight on one of the town's most beloved couples, Malcolm and Ilona Balfour. They were recognized for their dedication to the town, especially the Nature Preserve.

Born in South Africa, the Balfours, now in their 80s, celebrated their 58th wedding anniversary recently. Their life hasn't always been easy (Ilona says her husband often worked multiple jobs to provide for the family), but has been marked with a love of community. They moved to Miami in 1968, where Malcolm, the son of a South African journalist, began writing for Reuters and UPI. One assignment had him covering a ball at the Breakers in Palm Beach, where he ended up dancing with Rose Kennedy.

That news caught the attention of media mogul Generoso Pope of The National Enquirer, which was headquartered in Lantana. Pope hired Balfour, which brought the couple and their two small children to Lantana in 1972. By 1975, they had moved into the house where they still reside on Hypoluxo Island. Nestled between the beach and the newspaper, it was perfect for the young family. Malcolm rode his bicycle to work.

The location also put the Balfours in good position to overlook the Lantana Nature Preserve. It opened at 440 E. Ocean Ave. in 2000 and was practically in their backyard, with a small waterway between.

The preserve hadn't existed when the family first arrived. The Balfour kids waded through the water to play games on the property.

Ilona and other concerned residents were instrumental in the preserve's creation. In the 1970s, Ilona and others founded Save Our Parks to make sure valuable town waterfront land wasn't sold for development.

Other members of Save Our Parks included Rod and Elizabeth Tennyson, Andrea Babkie and Veronica Rauch, Ilona said at the presentation.

Save Our Parks' first victory came with the creation of Bicentennial Park in 1976. It looked like the town mayor then was going to sell the land to build shops on the waterfront property.

Save Our Parks rallied for a park and won. That same year, the Balfours, caught up in Bicentennial fervor, became U.S. citizens.

Next targeted for sale and development was the town dump, a 13-acre plot between the beach and Hypoluxo Island. Plans called for a luxury home community to be built on the site, but residents, particularly the Save Our Parks crew, lobbied and were ultimately successful in securing a park.

Developers built a luxury senior living home, the Carlisle, on 7.5 acres.

The 6.5 acres beside it became the Lantana Nature Preserve, designed to look much like what pioneers who arrived in 1865 would have seen.

As part of the negotiations with the developer, the Carlisle agreed to pay for maintenance.

That fee has grown over the years. This year, the town will receive $65,000 to care for the park. Carlisle residents are regular park visitors.

"We visited every bar in town to get the local fishermen involved and filled the council chambers with people who wanted a park," Ilona said.

Ilona is part of local tree lore. Folks say that when the preserve was being constructed, Ilona chained herself to a ficus tree to protect it from destruction as she held a sign that read "Leave my tree Ilona," a wordplay on her first name. She didn't actually do that.

"I threatened to tie myself to the tree," she says. But the ficus wasn't a native and had to go. It was replaced with a strangler fig. "The birds seem to like it," she says.

Since it opened in 2000, the Balfours have been active visitors and staunch supporters of the preserve's wildlife and conservation efforts. Malcolm was a member of the Town Council for nine years. Environmental and preservation issues remain part of his public service record.

By the late 1990s, the town began clearing the debris and grading the terrain to mimic a coastal dune. Nonnative plants were removed and replaced with mangrove seedlings and coastal grasses.

The Balfours, as members of the Friends of the Lantana Nature Preserve, were active visitors and supporters. In the early years, Friends of the Lantana Nature Preserve sponsored educational tours for children to teach them about native plants.

"We'd give them prizes when they correctly identified plants," Ilona said. "Before Mother's Day, we gave them each a butterfly plant to take home to their mothers."

If a bathroom visit was necessary, they marched the children next door to the luxurious Carlisle.

"The kids were more excited about the marble restrooms than the plants," Ilona remembered.

Former Mayor Dave Stewart, who drove down from his home in St. Augustine to witness the presentation, said the Balfours were dedicated to preserving the small-town feel of Lantana.

"They have done their best to make sure the town was a pleasant, nice place for people to live, work and play," he said. "They have always tried to do what is best." ★

Editor's Note

The right to vote: Still a thing after 250 years

Patriotic fervor is on full display this month, with Fourth of July fireworks extravaganzas up and down the coast — including in Lantana, Boynton Beach, Delray Beach and Boca Raton — and even a reading of the Declaration of Independence as part of Delray Beach's festivities.

It is quite a feat that America is still standing 250 years after that declaration was first read throughout the 13 colonies.

Let's keep that exuberance going as we head into the fall and the upcoming election season.

Nothing is more foundational to the ideal that is America than the right to vote, giving each citizen a say in the direction our country takes.

It'll be up to people like Wendy Sartory Link, Palm Beach County's election supervisor, to make sure the rules are followed and the elections go off without a hitch. That's no easy task when you realize that in Palm Beach County alone, there are close to 870,000 registered voters.

I attended an Elections Experience Tour in June that Link offered to teach "about the election process, voting equipment, ballot security, and the steps taken to ensure accurate and transparent elections."

Link's tour was impressive, detailing and demonstrating the steps taken during each part of the process to ensure the integrity of our elections.

The system's machines can move ballots at incredible speeds — yet still have time to weigh every ballot being mailed out as an added precaution — with built-in redundancies to verify an accurate count.

While the mailed-in votes zip through many parts of the system, the voter signatures on them are all checked manually by trained staff. When it comes to counting the vote, the results are tabulated by two separate systems, providing an automatic audit of every precinct's results.

When irregularities or issues pop up, the county's canvassing board — made up of Link, a county commissioner and a county judge — steps in to make a final determination.

But there will be plenty of places for confusion to pop up.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in June that states that allow mailed-in ballots postmarked by Election Day to be counted can continue to count them.

Just remember, Florida isn't one of those states. Florida elections supervisors can only count ballots from regular voters that arrive in their offices by Election Day.

There are also battles taking place that could impact the vote here, such as over what exactly is a free and fair election.

It has to be that everyone eligible to vote — and only those eligible to vote — are allowed to vote. However, some people place the emphasis on making it as easy as possible for all eligible voters to be able to cast a ballot, while others stress the need for additional safeguards to find and stop any ineligible voters from doing so.

In the end, it'll be up to the courts to determine what steps are OK and which go too far — and just how easy or difficult it should be for citizens to take part in the election process.

The founders didn't create a perfect system. Each generation has struggled to keep the promise of America going. Two steps forward, one step back; that's the history of our country.

We just need people willing to stand up for the rights and values that got us this far, especially the right to vote, to provide hope as America sets its sights on that next looming milestone — our tricentennial — 50 years from now.

Self Interest or Sellers' Best Interest

Today the luxury real estate market is increasingly saturated with Agents focusing time, energy and marketing dollars on their own self-interest rather than their sellers' best interest.

As a result, the commissions sellers pay are routinely misallocated by those Agents for self-promotion, rather than being fully invested in effective marketing for sellers' properties the Agents represent.

That shift reflects a broader cultural trend, where reality TV personalities and social media influencers too often can bamboozle the public. However, established agents with decades of experience, specialized expertise, and a proven record of exceptional sales remain the advisors to trust.

We deliver on that commitment by strategically guiding our clients with clarity, deep market knowledge, and the utmost discretion.

Delray Beach/Highland Beach

City sues town over back payments for fire rescue services

By Rich Pollack

After years of back-and-forth discussions and letters, Delray Beach in June filed a lawsuit against neighboring Highland Beach, claiming the oceanfront town owes the city $3.8 million for past fire rescue services.

As they have for at least the past four years, Highland Beach town officials dispute the contention.

"The amount claimed is not substantiated by the exhibits they provided," said Highland Beach Town Manager Marshall Labadie.

In April 2025, Highland Beach responded to a request from Delray Beach for mediation by saying the town sees the advantage of settling the dispute without going to court, but it wouldn't do that until it received detailed records it has been seeking for several years.

Now it appears mediation may be one of the first steps in the effort to resolve Delray Beach's claims that Highland Beach is in breach of contract.

"Now we have an opportunity to get to a place where we can resolve this issue," Delray Beach City Manager Terrence Moore said. "This is the next step."

In the lawsuit, the city said it initially sent the town a breach-of-contract notification in 2023 for $517,654 for moneys owed in 2020-2021 and 2021-2022.

The suit said that in 2025, the city further reviewed "all transactions and amounts for services rendered and determined the town owed the city $3.8 million."

Highland Beach's Labadie said that the town has not received a bill from Delray Beach since 2023.

For more than 30 years, Highland Beach and Delray Beach had an agreement in which Delray Beach provided fire and rescue services to the town using a town-owned fire station.

In May 2024, Highland Beach started its own fire department, following notification to the city in October 2021 that it would terminate the contract.

During the final years of the contract, Highland Beach disputed the way Delray Beach calculated how much it was owed.

In years prior to the split, Delray Beach began using the actual costs of the 21.5 firefighter paramedics assigned to the station in Highland Beach to determine the town's cost for service, about $5 million per year.

Highland Beach has argued, however, that the agreement between the two municipalities clearly states that such cost should be calculated based on the average "in-rank" cost of fire rescue personnel throughout the city.

Since that time, the two municipalities have exchanged correspondences, including one in which Highland Beach Town Attorney Len Rubin wrote that the town thinks the city actually owes it money because it overcharged the town almost $238,000 for fiscal years 2021 and 2022.

While the city in the lawsuit says it provided the town with additional materials and data in 2023, Highland Beach leaders have said they have not received all the detailed information that substantiated Delray Beach's contentions.

"There is nothing to validate their claims," Labadie said.

In March 2023, State Rep. Peggy Gossett-Seidman, a former Highland Beach town commissioner, took the issue before the state's Joint Legislative Auditing Committee that she served on. The committee referred the matter to the state auditor general's office, which reported that November that Delray Beach had mismanaged its billing and had not charged Highland Beach for $2.2 million the city was owed. The anticipated mediation following that report has yet to occur.

The new lawsuit, which was filed in Palm Beach County Circuit Court on June 10, came just a short time after Delray Beach City Commissioner Juli Casale asked for an update on efforts to collect money owed by Highland Beach.

Labadie said that he believes the dispute will eventually be resolved, but he doesn't think that will happen quickly.

"It will eventually work itself out in time," he said. ★

Speeding car flips on A1A in late-night crash

The driver of a car speeding northbound on State Road A1A in Gulf Stream late at night on June 29 lost control of the Land Rover SUV, which hit a water pipe, struck several trees and then flipped over onto the roadway.

The man, whose name has not been released, was transported by Trauma Hawk helicopter following the crash, with police shutting down A1A for about two hours following the 11:20 p.m. incident. Hours later, on the morning of June 30, A1A traffic was detoured for about 4 ½ hours as crews for Boynton Beach worked to repair the damaged water pipe.

Gulf Stream Police Chief Richard Jones said one of his officers was stationed in a cruiser along northbound A1A when his car shook from the Land Rover speeding past at an estimated 80 mph.

“As he looked up, the car was about beginning to lose control,” Jones said. The car struck a large water valve and crashed into multiple trees before flipping over, he said. The car’s engine could be seen along the roadway, having been knocked out of the car.

Jones said he could not release details about the driver while the crash is under investigation. The condition of the driver was not known as of press time June 30.

The crash occurred in the 4300 block of A1A, near the Ballantrae condominiums. Debris was scattered for several hundred feet, Jones said.

Delray Beach

‘Beach Takeover’ defused, but mob scene scared businesses, residents

By Larry Barszewski

More than 500 juveniles and young adults swarmed the Delray Beach pavilion and surrounding area June 6 in a “Beach Takeover” that police said “had been promoted extensively on social media.”

Police said they were aware of the postings and were on hand in force to maintain public safety during the gathering, with officers clearing the area once the beach officially closed at dusk.

Officers “managed several disturbances, fights, and acts of disorderly conduct that occurred as the crowd moved through the downtown corridor,” Police Chief Darrell Hunter wrote in an email to commissioners and the city manager the next day.

“Multiple arrests were made when individuals resisted lawful orders, interfered with officers, or engaged in criminal activity,” Hunter said. “Despite the size of the crowd and the challenges presented, officers effectively controlled the situation, prevented escalation, and restored normal operations without any major injuries or significant property damage.”

As of June 23, the Police Department was denying The Coastal Star’s public records request for police reports of the incident that City Commissioner Tom Markert described as a “mob scene at A1A and Atlantic,” with police saying the reports concerned an active criminal investigation.

At the City Commission’s June 9 meeting, Markert said the gathering was one of several “takeovers” that had occurred in Palm Beach County during the previous week. He had seen social posts for a June 5 takeover of the Wellington Mall and another June 6 at the beach on Singer Island. There have been other reported “teen takeovers” happening across the state over the past several months.

While Markert said he doesn’t want to see juveniles being arrested, he also said the Delray Beach incident was a “scary situation” from his perspective.

“We had several merchants that called me that had to close their doors because the conditions were unsafe,” Markert said. “I don’t want our residents to feel unsafe, and I certainly don’t want our merchants closing up their doors early on a Saturday night.” ★

City seeks to invest settlement funds in opioid recovery services

By Sephora Charles

Delray Beach commissioners plan to invest nearly $396,000 in state opioid settlement funds toward housing, job assistance and a new mobile health unit designed to connect residents with support services.

The city is receiving the money from annual distributions from a statewide opioid litigation settlement, established to address the effects of the opioid epidemic. The suits concerned the overdoses, addictions and deaths linked to manufacturing, distribution and over-prescribing of the painkillers.

“These funds should be allocated in a way that reaches the entire community, most importantly those who are currently still alive, but struggling to stay alive and are the victims of these horrible practices,” Lissa Franklin, the executive director of the Delray Beach Drug Task Force, said during public comments at the commission’s June 9 meeting.

Delray Beach currently has $395,524 available for opioid-related services, Assistant City Manager Jeff Oris said during the commission meeting.

The commission’s approved expenditure plan includes $125,500 for a mobile integrated health unit run by the fire rescue department, $135,000 for workforce and job assistance grants, and $135,024 for affordable housing grants for residents in recovery.

The mobile integrated health unit is designed to follow up with residents who were transported to the hospital due to opioid-related issues, recurring substance use or mental health issues. Through this program, residents who aren’t connected with recovery resources after their hospital visit will be referred to the appropriate professionals and services to help maintain long-term stability.

“This program, at its core, is meant to address on a local level a hole that we know exists in our health care system,” Fire Chief Ronald Martin said.

Settlement funds for the unit will finance up to 50% of the program’s anticipated $251,000 total, covering part of the salary for a paramedic and a licensed clinical social worker. No source of funding has been identified for the remaining cost.

Commissioner Juli Casale voiced her concern about funding a new two-person unit instead of contributing to an existing program from a private provider.

“I’m just wondering if it’s more financially efficient for us to find somebody doing it and fund them,” she said.

Casale worried that the unit will need additional funding in the next budget year to hire more staff — as the city prepares for potential budget reductions.

Martin acknowledged the commission’s concerns about the city’s financial uncertainty but emphasized the program’s importance.

“This is the right thing to do for the community,” he said.

The city is taking the community’s feedback to shape its spending priorities, Oris said.

“Treatment is not the issue right now; support for those in treatment and those who have come from treatment is the real issue,” he said.

As a next step, city staff is submitting the spending plan to the Florida Department of Children and Families. The city will then advertise a request for proposals for the approved services.

Staff will review applications before referring qualified proposals to the Opioid Settlement Advisory Committee, consisting of seven members appointed by the City Commission. The committee will then make funding recommendations to commissioners for final approval. ★

Residents upset about cemetery's condition

By Sephora Charles

Delray Beach city commissioners plan to discuss problems at the city's cemetery after hearing residents' complaints about deteriorating conditions there and a lack of upkeep — with one commissioner saying she can't even determine where her father is buried.

City Manager Terrence Moore said he will provide a comprehensive summary of the issues there during a July 14 commission workshop meeting.

Delray Beach Memorial Gardens Municipal Cemetery on Southwest 10th Street has reached capacity, and residents are worried about the maintenance of their loved ones' resting places.

Ann Stacey Wright, a city resident, said during public comments at the commission's June 9 meeting that she recently visited the cemetery and "was very upset at the condition of the headstone of my family members."

Grass had grown to nearly cover the tombstones, and damage was visible on the headstones, she said.

Vice Mayor Angela Burns said during the meeting that other residents discussed the matter with her. After spending some time in the cemetery, she said she is "very, very concerned."

The lack of plot space is leaving families scrambling to find a cemetery to bury their loved ones, including a young woman who went weeks without being able to bury her mother, Burns said.

"Families are not getting any closure," she said.

Last year, the city announced plans to expand the historic cemetery with two mausoleum buildings, including more than 2,000 spaces.

Residents are also worried about a tree that may be removed, which they said could affect the surrounding gravesites.

Burns shared feedback about the cemetery's online database. She said that her father was buried there in 1974, and she does not know exactly where his

Moore said that there are "record-keeping issues that date back decades."

Burns suggested holding the workshop to address these problems because the cemetery "is in bad shape." ★

The 14th (and 15th) colonies

Many people may not realize it, but Florida — then split between East Florida and West Florida — belonged to Great Britain during the Revolutionary War. The British got the two colonies from Spain in 1763 following the French and Indian War, and 20 years later — when the Revolutionary War ended — they went back to Spain.

Florida, despite its short history with Britain as its 14th and 15th colonies, was loyal to the crown and was enemy territory during the revolution. Many loyalists from the 13 original colonies made their way to Florida when the fighting started.

There wasn't much here. "Unlike the other British colonies in North America, East Florida literally had only one town," St. Augustine, said historian Roger Clark Smith, who teaches at the University of Florida.

He further explained, "St. Augustine was mentioned in letters by George Washington as a military target and a military concern — Congress authorized invasions into East Florida five times, three of which pierced our borders."

Janet DeVries Naughton, a local historian in Palm Beach County, echoed that in research she has done.

"East Florida's capital city St. Augustine served as a base of British operation against the south," Naughton wrote about Florida's short history under British rule. "The settlement had a fortification that included a garrison and a single British infantry regiment. This regiment successfully blockaded most invading rebels; therefore, few notable or epic battles were lost or won in the territory."

It's not surprising that the land that is now Palm Beach County played no role in the

A look at southern East Florida, on 1776 map of British colonies

The war's final naval battle took place in 1783 off the coast of present-day Palm Beach County. The Boca Raton Inlet is charted as 'Rio Seco,' the Jupiter Inlet as 'Grenville Inlet,' Lake Okeechobee as 'Lake Mayaco,' and 'Hillsboro Inlet' to the north is now the Fort Pierce Inlet. The Gulf Stream is called 'The Florida Stream.' Map provided by FloridaMemory.com war. If Florida was inhospitable to the revolutionaries and revolution taking place to the north, the coast between the current Boca Raton and Palm Beach inlets was just plain inhospitable to all.

Some native Americans

eked out an existence here, and historians say Spanish fishers occasionally camped along the coast, but that was about it.

The Gulf Stream connection

The Gulf Stream, however, brought the war alongside our coast. Its currents provided a lifeline between Great Britain and its holdings in the West Indies, with the Gulf Stream's closest point to shore off the coast of present-day Palm Beach County.

Historians say those product-

In a different age, historian Molly Thomas mused, the final naval battle of the Revolutionary War could have been known as the Battle of Boca Raton.

laden ships heading back to Britain from the West Indies were targets of marauding privateers — basically American pirates authorized by the government during the revolution to attack British ships and seize their goods.

The coast, though part of loyal Florida, would provide no comfort to British crews forced to abandon ship. Reaching shore would just put them amid unfriendly natives in a miserably hot and mosquito-infested landscape, overgrown with saw palmetto and mangroves.

The final battle

The term Gulf Stream barely existed when the Founding Fathers gathered in Philadelphia in July 1776 to sign the Declaration of Independence.

In fact, one of those Founding Fathers was the first to chart a map of the Gulf Stream only a few years earlier. Benjamin Franklin (of course!) managed the accomplishment when he wasn't busy inventing the lightning rod, bifocal glasses or — yes, he did this, too — an improved urinary catheter.

In 1783, with a peace treaty having been negotiated, the seas were still not safe — and news of the armistice traveled slowly. Two American ships, the Alliance and the Duc De Lauzun, were transporting 72,000 Spanish silver dollars from Havana to Philadelphia needed to pay Continental Army troops that March.

The Sybil and two other British ships came on the scene, with the Sybil chasing after the slow-moving and smaller Duc De Lauzun and face the Sybil broadside. Barry would later be appointed by President George Washington as the first commissioned officer in the U.S. Navy, awarded the rank of commodore.

The 28-gun frigate Sybil was badly damaged in the fight with the 36-gun frigate Alliance and limped away after the battle that lasted less than an hour.

Thomas was able to track the sea battle thanks to logs available online through Villanova University.

"Every day, at noon, the Alliance crew would log their coordinates," Thomas said. "That's how you know where they were each day at noon and how fast they were going."

In a different age, she mused, the fight could have been known as the Battle of Boca Raton. ★

South Palm Beach

Penny's worth a lot to residents here

By Brian Biggane

Everybody loves a mascot.

In their early years, the Miami Dolphins had Dolfan Denny, a man dressed in a garish orange-and-aqua outfit who ran around the Orange Bowl riling up the fans. (He was replaced by cheerleaders.)

The University of Florida has Albert, a person dressed in what has to be a very warm alligator costume. And the University of Miami has the Ibis, which for some reason twists its orange beak in opposite directions every time it sees a TV camera.

Now the town of South Palm Beach, a sleepy hamlet five-eighths of a mile long just north of the Lantana public beach, has a mascot of its own with Penny the Sea Turtle. It's a tribute of sorts to former artist-in-residence Penny Davidson, who constructed a life-size bronze turtle climbing over a rock in 2006 to commemorate the town's 50th anniversary.

The mascot idea came from administrative assistant Emma Trotto, who attended a statewide meeting of municipal employees in Clearwater Beach in April aimed at improving communications with residents.

"We were in a brainstorming session," Trotto said at the June Town Council meeting, "and a town north of us (DeBary) brought forward that they had made a mascot of a dinosaur for their town and anything that came from this dinosaur was getting the utmost respect and attention from the residents.

"Anything that Danny the Dinosaur would say, the residents were like, fine. If it came from any other staff member, not so much. So, it was a great way to bridge that gap and make government communications a little more exciting."

Deciding on the identity of the mascot was easy. The life-sized loggerhead turtle Davidson spent three years to create has easily become the town's most recognizable feature.

"People know the turtle," Vice Mayor Fran Attardi said during a brief discussion leading up to the council's approval of the move by a 5-0 vote. "You say, 'the town with the turtle,' and people know exactly where you're at."

The move also underscores the town's appreciation for Davidson, who not only sculpted the bronze turtle but also designed three glass mosaics that serve to hide unsightly electric boxes in front of the Sausalito, Southgate and Mayfair West condominiums.

Born in New Jersey, Davidson spent more than 30 years in Des Moines, Iowa, after marrying in 1949. She spent those years as a teacher of at-risk children before she and her husband, Sol, bought a houseboat in 1982 and spent five months cruising the

Mississippi before finding their way to Delray Beach.

Eight years later, in 1990, they moved to the Horizon West condo in South Palm Beach, where they would remain until Sol died in 2013.

"We didn't like South Palm Beach," Penny once said. "We loved South Palm Beach."

And the town loved her back.

"She was a warm spirit that made everyone feel welcome," Town Clerk Yude Davenport said. "She was the kind of person who never hesitated to lend a helping hand, volunteer her time or support a community event."

Davidson had demonstrated an artistic flair when she created a raw wool needlepoint named Flowering Shrub for the Judy Chicago Birth Project in the early 1980s. The piece is now part of the permanent collection at the Albuquerque Museum.

In South Palm Beach, Davidson became more active artistically, participating in the early Lake Worth Street Painting festivals and holding classes and workshops in the town.

"She had a very creative attitude toward life itself," longtime resident and former Council member Elva Culbertson said. "She was very fun-loving, very social. One thing most people don't know is she also started the town book club."

Culbertson said after Davidson's husband died, her two sons convinced her to move around the corner from South Palm Beach to the Carlisle, an assisted living facility. Culbertson said Carlisle officials wouldn't allow her to do her artwork there, so she left her equipment at Town Hall and did it there.

"She couldn't walk to Town Hall anymore because she was older, so one of us had to pick her up because she was still working on a mosaic," Culbertson said.

At least one of her works in the town features a penny as her signature; Culbertson said it could be several.

Davidson ultimately moved back to Iowa to be nearer her children in her final years. She died in 2020.

The South Palm Beach Town Council passed a resolution honoring her work in 2017 and the current council expressed its appreciation and enthusiasm for what the new town mascot could mean going forward.

"It's a fantastic way to go, and it's kind of preserving our town history and kind of glorifying it," Council member Adrian Burcet said. ★

South Palm Beach News

Lift station update — Thomas Biggs, executive vice president of Mock Roos, which is building South Palm Beach's new wastewater lift station, updated Town Council members on the project at their June 9 meeting and assured Mayor Rafael Pineiro that the project is on track for a spring 2028 completion.

Town Manager Jamie Titcomb said the town is seeking grant money from both federal and state agencies. The "early indications are we might have some success in both those arenas," he said.

Pineiro said he is hopeful Resilient Florida, which offers grants to mitigate the impact of sea-level rise and flooding, will provide $2.15 million of the expected $4 million to $5 million cost.

A1A planning timetable accelerated — Kim DeLaney, a representative of the Treasure Coast Regional Planning Council, appeared remotely at the June 9 council meeting and offered details on a plan for the revitalization of the State Road A1A corridor that has been accelerated by nearly a year.

DeLaney in April had told the Town Council her agency anticipated the final planning to be completed by early 2028. After Mayor Pineiro said he hoped she could speed that up, she returned to say the planning phase would now be completed by March 2027.

"This schedule suggests the process could begin immediately to work with town staff ... and council members and begin a very careful public engagement effort," DeLaney said. "It's a complex corridor to resolve the challenges the town is facing and it's going to take a series of complex solutions."

DeLaney said a number of entities need to be brought into the conversation, including FPL, her district, the Metropolitan Planning Organization, Palm Beach County, neighboring municipalities and the town's own condo associations.

After preliminary meetings with the various groups, the process is expected to include a public workshop in November, followed by an analysis of steps to be taken through next January, with a draft project report in February and a final report in March.

A significant question facing the town has been the struggle to find a place to create a crosswalk where residents could cross A1A safely. Pineiro said the Florida Department of Transportation owns 50 feet on either side of the center line of the road, opening up the possibility for a crosswalk to be created. DeLaney said she would research that and get back.

Sea wall markings approved — The Town Council adopted a resolution to require all condominiums facing the ocean to be marked with the numbers of their address to make it easier to communicate to police and fire agencies more accurately the exact location of beach emergencies. About half the buildings had already taken that step.

Board appointments — The council approved the appointments of Donna Pallante and Susan Saluru to the Community Activity Advisory Board.

Priest placed on leave following 'serious allegations'

A Boynton Beach priest has been placed on administrative leave, with the Diocese of Palm Beach announcing that "serious allegations" had been made against him.

The Rev. Alex J. Vargas, pastor of St. Thomas More Catholic Church on Military Trail near Woolbright Road since August 2025, had his ministerial faculties withdrawn immediately on May 6 and he is prohibited from exercising priestly ministry.

The nature of the allegations has not been disclosed. The diocese has retained Renaissance Associates, Ltd., an independent firm, to conduct an investigation.

The allegations were reported to the Florida Department of Children and Families by Lisa Linnell, the diocese's victim assistance coordinator, on June 18, according to a statement from the diocese.

Vargas had previously served the parish as an administrator and a vicar. He was born in 1971 in Honduras. The diocese appointed the Rev. Antony Pulikal as parochial administrator of St. Thomas.

The diocese encourages anyone who may have been a victim of abuse, misconduct, or criminal behavior by a representative of the church to come forward and report it through the diocese's reporting line at 561-775-9558 or through the Florida Department of Children and Families Abuse Hotline at 800-962-2873.

Tesla Cybertruck from donor to join town's police force

By Jane Musgrave

When a Manalapan resident said he wanted to give a Tesla Cybertruck to the town Police Department, Chief Jeffrey Rasor was dubious.

"I didn't want them to donate something that couldn't be used by the agency," he said.

With no police departments in Florida to turn to for advice, Rasor called the Las Vegas Police Department, which has embraced the futuristic tank-looking electric trucks that still turn heads even three years after their debut.

What Rasor learned was that it was worth a shot. Whether the cost of maintaining and charging up an electric truck will be less than a traditional police vehicle with an internal combustion engine, remains to be seen, he acknowledged.

"Vegas' opinion was that it can't be tested in a matter of months," he said. But, he said, after it's been on the road for a while, he will be able to determine if the cost savings are worth it.

The truck, which is to arrive in Manalapan in the next

An anonymous donor has gifted a Tesla Cybertruck to the Manalapan Police Department, which will see if the electric vehicle is cost effective. Design image provided several weeks, will mark the first time a Cybertruck has been used as a patrol vehicle in Florida, Rasor said. Nearby Highland Beach has a donated Tesla sedan, but police don't use it for routine work.

Rasor readily admitted the truck, with its huge front and rear windows and angular design, is going to attract attention.

As a police car, it will be outfitted with all the necessary equipment — flashing lights, sirens and the department's logo on the side. Unlike its civilian model, with an unpainted stainless steel body, the police car will be white.

Electric vehicles are slowly being added to police fleets throughout the country.

Like Manalapan, Vegas benefited from a gift. It got 10 Cybertrucks from a multimillion-dollar donation from tech venture capitalist Ben Horowitz and his wife, Felicia.

The trucks are expensive.

The Cybertrucks in Vegas cost roughly $270,000 each after the police upgrades are added. That adds to the calculus of whether buying them is cost-effective.

Rasor said he didn't know exactly how much Manalapan's truck cost. The donor wanted to be anonymous.

The use of Cybertrucks is still somewhat rare. It's far more common for police departments to add electric sedans to their fleets.

South Pasadena, California, made headlines in 2024 when it announced it had swapped out all of its cars for electric cruisers.

Rasor said there are still some kinks to be worked out. The delivery of Manalapan's Cybertruck was delayed because there isn't a smooth supply chain for the police upgrades that are needed.

But, he said, if enough police agencies begin using the trucks, that will change eventually.

In the meantime, he has some math to do. "There's still a question of whether we'll see a big cost savings or not," Rasor said. ★

Town jumps the shark with shore-fishing measure

By Jane Musgrave

A month after the Manalapan Town Commission passed a law cracking down on shark-fishing from its shores, elected leaders learned they overstepped their authority.

Regulating fishing, even reeling sharks into shore, is the sole province of the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission, Town Attorney Keith Davis told commissioners at their June meeting.

Peppered with letters from shore-based shark anglers, who claimed the measure passed in May is unconstitutional, Davis said he called the general counsel for the wildlife commission.

"He said, 'The problem comes anytime you try to restrict activity on property you don't own,'" Davis said. "We don't have a town beach."

In July, another measure will be proposed, Davis said. While he didn't use the word repeal, that's essentially what will happen.

The proposed measure will ban trespassing and creating a nuisance. It will rely on education of both town residents and anglers about what is allowed.

But, Davis conceded, without a municipal beach, the town can't impose restrictions on shark-fishing.

Such laws violate Florida's 2024 constitutional amendment which guarantees state residents the right to hunt and fish.

Town commissioners thought they had threaded a very thin hook by not banning shark-fishing entirely. Instead, the measure bans fishing at any beach that "may endanger the health and safety of swimmers and other beachgoers." It explicitly banned practices that attract sharks — such as chumming and blood baiting.

Creating such restrictions is up to the wildlife commission, Davis said.

"There are very strict regulations for shark-fishing activity," he said. In fact, those shark-fishing from shore need special permits.

Town Manager Eric Marmer

said the measure was needed because the town had become a magnet for shore-based shark fishing. Anglers were running baited lines hundreds of yards off-shore. More sophisticated anglers are using drones to chum the waters.

But anglers, who wrote the town to protest the law, said the threat was being exaggerated.

Boynton Beach Vice Mayor Thomas Turkin said there is little risk to swimmers from shark-fishing.

"The overwhelming majority of land-based shark fishing along Florida's Atlantic coast occurs at night, after swimmers, sunbathers, paddlers, and near-shore boaters have left the water," wrote Turkin, who described himself as an "avid angler."

Others pointed out that there is no evidence shore-based shark fishing has led to an increase in attacks on swimmers.

"The overwhelming majority of documented shark bite incidents tracked by the International Shark Attack File involve swimmers, surfers, snorkelers, or other in-water recreational users — not at all where licensed surf anglers were fishing from shore," wrote angler Christopher Dilecce, who operates a shark-fishing charter business in Brevard County.

Other coastal cities, including Delray Beach and Boca Raton, have passed measures to limit shark-fishing from their public beaches.

But other cities, including Miami Beach and Marco Island, were forced to abandon their laws when the wildlife commission said their efforts were unconstitutional. ★

TAXES

they say have been bloated thanks to increasing property values on which the taxes are based.

At the same time, the proposed amendment is being portrayed by opponents as a potential nightmare for local governments that depend on property tax dollars to provide a variety of services. They say it could also create unwanted costs for businesses and landlords that could be passed on to consumers and renters.

“You’re opening doors for local governments to create other fees and taxes to offset the loss in revenue,” said Jeff Kottkamp, president and CEO of Florida TaxWatch, an organization that is often on the side of keeping taxes reasonable. “It could ultimately lead to no savings at all.”

The potential savings

Should the amendment pass, homesteaded property owners would see this year’s $51,411 homestead exemption — up from $50,722 in 2025 — increase to $150,000 in 2027 and to $250,000 the following year.

That would be welcome news for homesteaded property owners in the state. Take, for example, a homeowner in Ocean Ridge whose property has a taxable value of about $1 million (see chart). That homeowner pays property taxes not just to the town of Ocean Ridge, but also to Palm Beach County and others including the county’s Children’s Services Council and the Palm Beach County Health Care District — a total of a dozen different property tax assessments.

Should the amendment pass, that homeowner would likely see a tax saving of almost $1,800 over the two-year period, bringing the total tax bill down from about $18,500 to about $17,900 the first year of the increased exemption and to about $17,300 after the second year. The savings would continue into the future, with increases in the exemption tied to the Consumer Price Index.

For the town of Ocean Ridge, that homeowner’s reductions will translate into a tax revenue loss of $361 from the town the first year and about $725 the second year.

The challenge for the town, and for most Florida municipalities, will be to figure out how to continue providing services with less revenue if the exemptions are increased.

That, says Charles Chapman, a legislative advocate for the Florida League of Cities, is likely to cause a shift in footing the bill, with those without a homestead exemption being on the front lines.

“If you reduce the number of people paying, those that remain pay a higher percentage of the taxes,” he said.

idea that there are really just three options available to the local governments.

Elected officials could raise the property tax rate, called the millage; they could increase fees, or they could reduce services. They could do any combination of those or all three. The goal, Moore said, is to strike a balance between revenue generation and reduced expenses.

Factor in the “pebble in the pond” effect, opponents of the amendment say, and negative impacts of the local government actions could be widespread.

Chapman uses the example of his child’s soccer league to illustrate the point. The league pays the city to lease the playing field. If the city raises the cost of the agreement, the league may possibly raise the registration fees to a point where Chapman may have to decide whether to enroll his child in just two of the league’s three sessions.

With the potential for large revenue cuts a reality, cities are already looking for ways to trim expenses, but where to cut could be a challenge politically, as could the idea of raising the tax rate to generate revenue.

Highland Beach Town Manager Marshall Labadie points out that governments may be forced to be less responsive to the wishes of their constituents if the money isn’t there. “It’s difficult for elected officials to not spend money on services residents are demanding,” he said. “It’s challenging.”

Public safety is one area where residents often demand the best service possible. An earlier version of the proposed amendment made it difficult for governments to reduce public safety funding, but that language is no longer in the amendment.

Making cuts to public safety, however, is a choice elected officials typically avoid.

How tax rate could increase

Local governments and taxing districts can raise their tax rates or millages up to $10 for every $1,000 of taxable value in order to generate additional revenue, but a new law requires a unanimous vote of the governing body to approve the tax rate increase if it is more than 10% higher than the rolled back tax rate, which is the rate that would raise the same amount of taxes as the previous year, except for taxes from new construction.

A raise in the tax rate would impact most of a municipality’s property owners and could lead businesses to increase prices and landlords to increase rents. The same holds true for special taxing districts, such as the South Florida Water Management District.

But even non-homesteaded properties will see relief from escalating property taxes. The proposed constitutional amendment would cap the maximum annual assessment increase at 5%, down from the current 10% maximum.

Politically, elected officials say, raising taxes is never a good idea.

Those familiar with the amendment say its genesis in part comes as a result of a belief that local governments spent more than they needed to because they were getting more property tax revenue as home values rose.

The amendment stops short of eliminating all property taxes for homesteaded properties — something Gov. Ron DeSantis has supported — but the referendum “requires, through general law, a schedule for full elimination” of those taxes.

Belt-tightening avoided?

TaxWatch’s Kottkamp, a former lieutenant governor and Republican legislator, says that too often governments looked at how much they had to spend and found ways to spend it, rather than figure out how much they needed and come up with the necessary funds.

“Part of this is their own fault,” he said. “They have hidden behind the increased value and not exercised fiscal constraint.”

Numbers provided by TaxWatch show that property tax revenue for three of the area’s largest cities grew by more than 100% from 2014 to 2024.

Boynton Beach saw a 130% increase in property tax revenue. Boca Raton, according to TaxWatch, saw a 120% increase in tax revenue, while Delray Beach saw a 106% increase. The study does not include smaller towns in the coastal Palm Beach County area.

State Rep. Peggy Gossett-Seidman, R-Highland Beach, a former town commissioner, says that some of the funds the local governments received could have been put into reserves, used to pay debt or used to reduce taxes.

Gossett-Seidman, who voted to put the proposed amendment before voters, said that she has seen examples of wasteful and even illegal spending in communities outside of South Florida while sitting on the statehouse’s Joint Legislative Auditing Committee.

“There are counties and cities that need to do better,” she said.

Costs have increased

Highland Beach’s Labadie says that one of the reasons governments are spending more is that their costs have gone up as well. Insurance costs have increased and so have employee costs, especially in public safety.

A quick look on Google showed that starting salaries for police officers in Boca Raton, Delray Beach and Boynton Beach increased dramatically between 2015 and 2025. The Google search showed that Boca Raton’s starting salaries increased from around $48,000-$50,000 to $91,000, while Delray Beach’s starting salaries increased from $40,000-$50,000 to $72,000, and Boynton Beach’s went from $48,241 to $73,632.

Chapman from the League of Cities points out that a fire truck that cost $500,000 to $600,000 in 2019 now costs $1.5 million.

Is issue ripe for voters?

For its part, the League of Cities believes that a flaw in the proposed amendment is that it applies the same exemption to cities across the board, without taking into consideration the different conditions each faces.

“Tax revenue is the bread and butter for how municipalities operate,” Chapman said. “It requires an understanding that one size doesn’t fit all.”

Kottkamp from TaxWatch says that his organization is concerned that more time wasn’t spent on devising a property tax reform plan and believes lawmakers could have waited until 2027 when a constitutionally mandated Taxation and Budget Reform Commission will be meeting.

“We love to see some property tax relief, but we’d like to see more time,” he said.

Gossett-Seidman, who counters that legislators have been working on this behind the scenes for more than two years, says she thinks that one of the benefits of the amendment is that it has generated conversations about municipal finances.

“It nothing else, it has got people talking,” she said. “I’m hoping taxpayers start looking at budgets.”

What’s happening locally

Boca Raton — Deputy City Manager and Chief Financial Officer Jim Zervis said the tax revenue loss will be “manageable” for the city. Nonetheless, the city will have to make budget cuts next year if voters approve the amendment.

No significant changes are planned in how the city approaches this year’s budget, though officials have already made $1.27 million in cuts proposed by staff.

Council member Jon Pearlman doesn’t think the city is going far enough this year given the potential for a steep revenue decline on the horizon.

Boynton Beach — City Manager Dan Dugger said the city will have to look at other ways to fund discretionary programs using fees or assessments, or possibly creating special taxing districts like Boca Raton’s Beach and Park District.

He said if the amendment passes, programs that might be difficult to protect include subsidized senior services, neighborhood and social-service assistance, and free community events.

Briny Breezes — Town Manager Bill Thrasher is looking for ways to reduce expenditures, possibly refinancing town loans in hopes of getting lower interest rates, and is seeking other revenue options “if there are any.”

Delray Beach — City officials are debating what budget strategy makes the most sense this year given November’s referendum and its potential implications. They could keep the property tax rate steady, borrow minimally from reserves and make more than $19 million in cuts — or possibly raise the tax rate, dip heavily into reserves, and reduce the amount of cuts needed to about $5 million.

“I think there’s an argument to be made that we’re about to get handcuffed,” the city’s chief financial officer, Henry Dachowitz, said of the referendum at a June 9 commission workshop.

“You’re playing a game and you’ve got to look at the rules and do the best you can for the community,” he said. “I think hard times are coming. Taxpayers, when offered the chance to pay less taxes, will generally take it.”

While officials said the city doesn’t need to make any immediate decisions related to the referendum, they also said they can’t wait until the referendum passes to start planning what to do.

Commissioners discussed creating “municipal services taxing districts” for services like parks and recreation, which would be among the most likely to see deep cuts. The taxing districts, which would require County Commission approval as well, would offset losses in city revenue from the referendum with new taxing districts on property tax bills.

Dachowitz said the city should also begin a major “cost-accounting” to develop what the fees for different services could look like if the commission goes in that direction.

Gulf Stream — Town officials say they aren’t overly concerned about the initial years of a forced property tax cut if it is approved by voters.

The town is facing minimal hits

Cities and towns could face reduced tax revenue

The chart, using information from the Property Appraiser’s Office, shows how much tax revenue each city and town lost in 2025 due to the $50,722 homestead exemption and, using the same tax rate and values, how much the lost revenue would be if the exemption is raised to $150,000 in 2027 and to $250,000 in 2028. Some cities and towns have refined and produced their own estimates since the appraiser’s figures came out.

in 2027 and 2028 — the latter year amounting to about 3.9% of the town’s budget — because the average value of Gulf Stream’s 373 homestead properties is about $2.8 million.

“So even with a $250,000 exemption, the other $2.5 million is being taxed and would not be exempt. So that’s kind of our saving grace is having a very large per-property taxable value,” Town Manager Trey Nazzaro said.

Officials are less certain past 2028, in part because it’s not clear what a “schedule for full elimination” of homesteaded property taxes mentioned in the referendum would look like.

Highland Beach — Town leaders are reviewing their five-year financial plan to see what the future holds for some capital projects. Town Manager Marshall Labadie says the town will be able to weather a new $150,000 homestead exemption with the help of reserves without having to make major cuts but that the second year’s exemption increase to $250,000 may be more of a challenge.

Lantana — Town Manager Brian Raducci said vacant positions in town are temporarily frozen and may be eliminated through attrition because of the uncertainty around the referendum.

Major capital initiatives, such as the Lantana Beach Master Plan project, will face re-evaluation as the town shifts to a strict “maintain and replace” infrastructure model if the referendum passes, he said.

Another proactive fiscal measure being proposed is to reduce the maximum merit-based employee salary increase in the new budget from the 5% allowed in the past to a 4% maximum.

“The projected revenue drop will impact core departments like police, public services, development and the library,” Raducci said, if the referendum passes. “Services, and non-essential services, including park/beach maintenance and all major community events, will face severe reductions or elimination.”

Manalapan — Town commissioners have been briefed on the amendment and the town will adjust if necessary. Manager Eric Marmer says the town will continue to evaluate its budget and look at additional revenue opportunities and possible savings if needed.

Ocean Ridge — The town is still determining the impact to its finances should the referendum pass, but Vice Mayor Steve Coz thinks it should still be in good shape given the strength of its property values. The town also benefits from having strong reserves, he said.

The town is changing its fee structure to meet new state requirements, including for building permits, so that the fees more accurately reflect the cost of the services being provided.

South Palm Beach — Town Manager Jamie Titcomb says the town is in good shape in the short term, having built up reserves that should allow it to continue funding planned capital improvements.

In the long term, local legislative issues will have to be decided on a case-by-case basis and on available funding. ★

Q&A on Florida’s property tax referendum

Q: Would I still owe property taxes if the taxable value of my homestead is less than $250,000 — the amount of the exemption in the second year?

A: Yes. All property owners with homesteads worth more than $25,000 will continue to pay at least a school tax.

Q: Would my total tax bill go down if my homestead’s assessed value is over $500,000?

A: More than likely. However, a number of variables could reduce the savings and possibly eliminate them, such as an increase in some of the tax rates you pay.

Q: Can local governments raise their tax rates?

A: Yes, but for larger increases, a unanimous vote of a municipality’s governing body — or a public referendum — is required.

Q: Can my city or town charge more for services that offset my tax savings?

A: Yes, governments are allowed to charge fees for a variety of services — including for parking, libraries and recreation programs — and they can also increase fines.

Q: Why do proponents feel this amendment is necessary?

A: Many think there has been wasteful spending by local governments as property values increased. They want to limit property tax revenue to core municipal services such as public safety and infrastructure.

Q: Will the assessed value of my property increase?

A: Most likely. However, the assessed value would still be limited to a maximum 3% increase annually for homesteaded properties. For other properties, the value could only increase a maximum of 5%, which is half the 10% annual increase currently allowed.

Q: Would nonprofits be impacted?

A: Yes. Local government funding to nonprofits would likely be cut or reduced. Special taxing districts such as Palm Beach County’s Children’s Services Council, which provides grants to nonprofits, would likely see a significant reduction in funding.

10 Questions

MEET YOUR NEIGHBOR: Ronda Gale

Delray Beach resident Ronda Gale has changed her career focus from her 30-plus years as a tattoo artist to pursuing fine art, a clothing line, writing, mentoring budding tattoo artists, and hatching plans for a reality TV show about tattooing.

Through Sept. 27, her shell sculptures are being exhibited at Persistence of Matter at the Cornell Art Museum, “showcasing artists who transform the forgotten into the unforgettable.”

Gale’s turn did not come lightly; she’s had three wake-up calls, with the latest a year ago. In a severe boating accident, she broke her neck and shattered her arm.

“I’m not able to tattoo,” Gale, 57, said. “I’ve always been a fine artist, too, and the accident granted me the time to fully go into that route. So, I would say that’s my direction.”

In the 2017-2018 time frame, she ended her marriage and lost her parents, one of her brothers and a best friend. These events also caused her to rethink her work values.

“I’ve realized how precious time is with loved ones and family,” she said. “I was tattooing until 2 in the morning every day, and when I was invited to be on movie sets and go on shows, I’d be like, ‘No, I’m working.’ ‘No, I have an appointment.’ And my work really ate my life away.”

In 2021, a fire at a pizzeria next door spread to her tattoo shop, destroying all her artwork, her collection of others’ artwork and books. That spurred her to create a new business, Hell Her, presenting her murals, paintings, sculptures and clothing line. Hell Her is used in the context of “hell” meaning bad times, and “her” equating to one’s elevated self.

As Gale develops her new ventures, she recalls how her tattoo career followed a rich trajectory, starting with temporary tattoo transfers on the streets of New York City. “I was doing tattoos at street fairs, and I would set up at different bars and events and hire friends to paint on tattoos, and then I started to think about doing real ones,” she said.

“Back then, it was a very secret underground world,” she said. “It was mostly a male-dominated profession, and they’re tough, a lot of bikers and people like that. People didn’t want to teach you, and so it was very hard to get your foot into the door to learn it.”

However, she persevered and did find some initial places that would accept her.

After attending a summer program in Italy, Gale “stayed and tattooed,” she said. “I traveled to different shops and different places. It was such a different world. I loved it there. Everybody was so giving and sharing and nice.”

There she was exposed to different styles. “I had been taught what we would call ‘single-needle,’ very fine-line tattooing; there, it was ‘seven-needle.’ The first shop I went to in Europe, their motto was ‘bold will hold.’ So, I learned a whole different aspect to tattooing that I didn’t know. It was an interesting transition for me.”

Her favorite tattoos: “I love doing things that go with your body, things that flow with a part of your body, not just a small stuck-on tattoo.”

Her least favorite: eyeliner, eyebrows, beauty marks: “I’ve really stayed away from the cosmetic world,” she said.

She counts singer Rod Stewart, magician David Blaine and actress Sarah Michelle Gellar among her clients.

Stewart wanted a thistle, the flower of Scotland, and a rampart lion, the symbol of Scotland. For Blaine, she tattooed his logo, a cherub and little initials. For Gellar, “I did a little piece, I don’t even remember. I think she got a Japanese kanji for patience,” Gale said.

Q. Where did you grow up and go to school? How do you think that has influenced you?

A. I was born in Long Beach, New York. I grew up in Island Park, on the water. I always say I grew up in the water. Boat life, beach life and being surrounded by ocean was a great way to grow up, and it’s still a necessity in my life. I studied illustration at Fashion Institute of Technology in NYC and lived in the gritty rock ‘n’ roll streets of the Lower East Side, which shaped a lot of who I became creatively.

While in school, I worked for Temptu, doing temporary tattoos and design work, including Robert De Niro’s tattoos for the film Cape Fear, which ultimately led me into tattooing professionally. Later, I studied painting in Florence, Italy, at Polimoda and spent years traveling and working throughout Europe as a tattoo artist during the early days of tattoo culture. Living in other countries and being surrounded by art, history, and different cultures really opens your mind creatively and personally. Growing up between the ocean and the intensity of New York gave me both grit and beauty, fast-moving and calm. I think that energy still exists in anymore.

Q. How did you choose to make your home in Delray Beach?

A. I knew I wanted to live somewhere along the Florida coast where I could surf, and even though there’s not much of that here, nothing hit me like Delray Beach. I had artwork in an exhibit during Art Basel Miami Beach and spent a few days in Delray afterward. I instantly fell in love with “the Village by the Sea.” It reminded me of my hometown, Long Beach, New York, “the city by the sea,” but times a thousand. A few weeks later, on Jan. 1, 2025, I was living here.

Q. What is your favorite part about living in Delray Beach?

A. I was drawn to Delray’s energy on the Avenue, the sense of community, and of course, the beach right across the street. Delray has a mix of nature, culture and excitement, and still somehow keeps a small-town vibe. In a lot of ways, it feels like a blend of my hometown beach life and the creative energy of New York City. You don’t find that just anywhere. There are always fun community, business, music, and art-inspired things to do, and great restaurants, too.

Q. What book are you reading now?

A. I usually read several books at the same time ... and of course the Delray papers and magazines, too. I tend to bounce between psychology, spirituality, creativity, mind-set and business books. In the mornings, I’ll often listen to a Joe Dispenza meditation or creative visualization audio. Being a reiki master, I often refer back to reiki manuals by Nitya Vink. Right now, I’m also reading and following the work of local mind-set entrepreneurs Ryan Zofay and Tracy Litt.

Q. What music do you listen to when you need inspiration? When you want to relax?

A. When I’m creating, I usually listen to relaxing instrumental music with an upbeat, chill vibe. Dancing and movement always gets creative energy flowing. Classic rock and my secret love of old disco always does the trick.

Q. Do you have a favorite quote that inspires your decisions?

A. “Don’t believe everything you think.” A lot of the negative things we think about ourselves were placed there by other people’s opinions and judgments, so recognize that critical voice in your head and don’t let it control you.

Q. Have you had mentors in your life? Individuals who have inspired your life decisions?

A. I think we can learn something from everyone. The day we think we know it all is the day we stop growing. My parents, Jack Hoelzer and Judy Good, influenced me in very different ways. My mom was like an angel, always encouraging and supportive, while my dad, an artist himself, was a tough Marine and perfectionist who pushed me to do things “right.” My brother, Ken, has also been a huge source of strength in my life and has always been there for me.

Q. If your life story were made into a movie, who would you want to play you?

A. I’d like to see Emma Stone or Leslie Mann play me ... or back in the day, Bette Midler. They all have humor, quirkiness, and a strong edge with a little bit of chaos mixed in.

Q. What professions have you worked in? What professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

A. I’ve worked as a professional tattoo artist for over 30 years, as well as a painter, illustrator, muralist. Over the years, I’ve tattooed high-profile clients across music, film and entertainment, created public beautification projects and murals, exhibited artwork, and more recently began developing sculptural work using reclaimed shell fragments gathered from Delray Beach dredging and shoreline restoration projects.

I’m most proud of the recognition I’ve received throughout the years, from the Society of Illustrators while in college to more recent honors like winning the Woman of the Arts award in Long Beach, New York. Most of all, I love speaking to groups about transformation, mind-set, and overcoming adversity through creativity.

Q. What advice do you have for a young person selecting a career today?

A. Do what you love, something you lose time doing, and it won’t feel like work. Find a way to create value from what naturally interests you. It’s important not to let other people’s opinions discourage your vision. Never tell yourself, “I can’t,” and don’t let anyone else dim your dreams, no matter how extreme they may seem. I did it for years, but I don’t allow myself to

Lantana

Proposed budget includes continuation of capital projects

By Mary Thurwachter

Lantana Town Manager Brian Raducci told the Town Council during its June 8 budget workshop that although the town “is pretty far along” in its budget process, things could change if the Florida constitutional amendment on homestead exemptions passes in November.

“No one knows if it will or won’t pass,” Raducci said.

The town is also dealing with the expiration of the county’s Infrastructure Surtax, which helped it pay for capital projects.

Raducci said the town will continue to spend money still in that account for planned projects. Those include paving, parks, library building improvements, and police classrooms, as well as the creation of an archive center in the town’s Bicentennial Building.

“Our 10 priorities haven’t changed much over the past four or five years,” Raducci said. “They include maintaining infrastructure — especially the utility plant, the sea wall at Bicentennial Park which should begin after the July 4 celebration, and we’ve got a major drainage project going on down on the island,” meaning Hypoluxo Island.

Other priorities include continued beautification projects, responsible development, attracting and retaining valuable employees, continuing to attract business along Ocean Avenue, promoting community engagement, continuing to support the library, resuming the dune restoration project, installing an ADA accessible ramp at the beach and financing public safety with state-of-the-art technology.

Council members, during an April 10 visioning session, agreed by consensus to consider proceeding with the first phase of a $9.5 million Beach Master Plan. This includes boardwalk replacement, building a new two-story restaurant and event building, adding a new restroom on the north end of the beach and demolishing the existing restaurant and pavilion.

Finance Director Stephen Kaplan talked about the forecasted property tax revenue using the current $3.75 per $1,000 of taxable value tax rate, saying the town’s property tax revenue would be approximately $7.85 million.

That would amount to a $477,000 increase in property taxes this year, while general fund revenues would also include a $47,000 increase in franchise taxes and fees and $79,000 more in metered parking (where a $1-an-hour fee increase is recommended).

Still, Kaplan forecast a $746,000 decrease in revenue compared to the current budget. This decline, he said, is primarily attributed to a one-time, non-recurring grant of $1.7 million received this year.

Kaplan said the budget accounts for a potential 15% increase in health and dental insurance premiums, alongside funding for tuition reimbursement and various departmental changes.

Despite these rising costs, Kaplan said, “the inherent flexibility built into the budget allows the general fund to remain nearly balanced.”

The budget proposes to reduce the maximum employee merit-based salary increase from 5% to 4%.

Curbside garbage pickup is due for a 4% increase for property owners.

Kaplan also detailed the fund balances, saying $27 million is in reserves, with $15.7 million in the unassigned fund balance.

Town Council members agreed to move forward with taking the necessary steps to place a referendum question before voters regarding the sale of specific town-owned properties, future property sale authority and town leasing authority.

The second budget workshop, where the proposed millage rate will be set, is scheduled for July 13. Public hearings will be on Sept. 8 and 17. ★

Town takes over dock permits on northern Hypoluxo Island

By Patrick Sherry

Lantana officials approved an agreement with the Town of Palm Beach for Lantana to oversee boat dock permitting for 15 waterfront properties whose docks are within the nearby town’s jurisdiction.

The Lantana Town Council unanimously approved the agreement at its June 22 meeting. Recent mapping of the town showed that the 15 properties at the northern end of Hypoluxo Island, along North Atlantic Drive, are in the town of Palm Beach’s jurisdictional waters. This prompted Lantana staff to request authority to process permits for boat docks, piers, pilings, boat lifts, floating docks, and related accessory structures. The agreement would allow Lantana officials to administer, process, review, and approve permits for any boat dock or related projects for those specific properties.

Town staff will use its own permitting standards and code of ordinances when reviewing applications. The town will also indemnify Palm Beach from any claims or liabilities arising from its adherence to the agreement.

Either town can terminate the agreement with 180 days’ written notice; otherwise, it will remain in effect until terminated. ★

Lantana News

Town clerk resigns — Town Clerk Kathleen Dominguez announced her resignation at the June 8 Town Council meeting. Dominguez, a certified municipal clerk with a degree in public communications from Florida Atlantic University, has been Lantana’s clerk since January 2020.

Since July 2023, Dominguez has been working remotely from Nashville, Tennessee, where her husband is employed. Holding down the fort locally has been Maria Rios, the executive assistant to the town manager and deputy town clerk.

“It is a bittersweet transition,” Dominguez said. “But it was simply the right time for a new chapter. Lantana is a wonderful community, and I am certainly going to miss the town and the fantastic people I’ve had the pleasure of working with.”

Town Manager Brian Raducci said a determination on Dominguez’s replacement has not been made. “We are in the process of reviewing our needs and options,” he said.

Pompey Park project advances — Pompey Park is getting a new community center to replace its current facility. The Delray Beach City Commission voted 4-1 during its June 9 meeting to approve a guaranteed maximum price of $59.2 million for the project, which will be built by Core Construction.

City staff also addressed community concerns about the condition of the park’s concession stand, determining that the building is not salvageable. Following construction of the new community center and demolition of the existing building, Core Construction will demolish the concession stand.

Briny Breezes

Tax rate jump proposed to cover capital project loans

Briny Breezes residents could see a big tax increase. Town Manager Bill Thrasher is proposing increasing the property tax rate from $3.75 to $6.75 per $1,000 of taxable value.

If that rate is adopted this year, the owner of a mobile home with a taxable value of $150,000 would pay $1,012.50 in town property taxes, a $450 increase.

Thrasher said in an email to The Coastal Star that the increase is needed to help make payments on a loan the town is seeking from the state of Florida for capital improvement projects, which include drainage improvements and enhancing the town’s entire sea wall. Given the town’s current taxable value, the $3 increase will raise about $300,000 to cover debt service payments.

“The amount of the loan has not been estimated but will be as large of a loan as a $300,000-per-year payment will allow,” he said.

Thrasher made the same tax rate proposal last year, but he pulled back and recommended keeping the rate at $3.75 per $1,000 when he realized the town couldn’t get a loan in time.

The town’s tax rate had been at the state-maximum $10 per $1,000 up until 2023, when it was reduced dramatically with some police costs shifted to the town’s corporation, Briny Breezes Inc., which then charged property owners an assessment. That was done to give room to raise the tax rate in the future for money the town would need to make debt payments on the anticipated loans.

A tentative budget hearing is set for 5 p.m. Sept. 10 at Town Hall, 4802 N. Ocean Blvd. A final hearing is set for Sept. 24.

Manalapan to the 81-year-old business tycoon who was known as the “bad boy” of tech as he built his fortune.

Satter called it the Ellison effect. He is one of the five richest men in the world, worth an estimated $201 billion to $238 billion, and people take notice of him, Satter said.

Ellison burst on the scene in 2022 when he paid $173 million for the 16-acre former Ziff estate immediately south of the 2 acres he is buying from Satter. It was the most expensive residential real estate transaction in Florida history, shattering the previous state record of $122.7 million.

Two years later, Ellison doubled down, buying the 310-room Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa for $277.4 million.

Other luxury real estate experts agreed that Ellison’s record-breaking land buys put Manalapan in the spotlight.

But, they said, Manalapan is unique.

‘No signs of slowing down’

“I think many buyers who can’t necessarily find what they want in Palm Beach have come down to Manalapan and realized they can get more,” said Nick Younker, of William Raveis Real Estate in Palm Beach.

Wealthy buyers fall in love with the large lots that stretch from the Atlantic Ocean to the Intracoastal Waterway — property that doesn’t exist in

Ellison

MacNeil

Palm Beach, he said.

Margit Brandt, who represented MacNeil in the purchase of Satter’s land, agreed.

“Manalapan continues to be the premier destination for ocean-to-lake transactions, attracting more and more discerning buyers year over year,” said Brandt, of Premier Estate Properties in Palm Beach.

To underscore her point, on the same day MacNeil closed on the deal with Satter, Brandt represented Pan-Pacific Mechanical CEO Ron McMackin when he and his wife, Town Commissioner Cindy McMackin, sold their estate at 1660 S. Ocean Boulevard for $72 million.

The combination of MacNeil and McMackin gave Brandt a $104 million day, cementing her standing as the top-ranked agent in Manalapan for 2026.

But, Younker said, such days are no longer unusual. “There will have been multiple $100 million-plus sales by the end of this year,” he said. “It shows no signs of slowing down.”

MacNeil’s parcels

MacNeil, a car accessories magnate with an estimated net worth of $4.2 billion, has done his part to keep land prices in Manalapan sky-high.

The 2 acres he bought from Satter will allow him to more than double the size of the adjacent 17,558-square-foot fully Earth-moving equipment and workers are busy at 1960 S. Ocean Blvd. in Manalapan on June 29. The work is taking place on David MacNeil’s side of the property that he and fellow multibillionaire Larry Ellison agreed to split. furnished house that he bought earlier this year on land once owned by pop singer Billy Joel.

According to plans that he submitted to the Manalapan Architectural Commission, the 2½-story addition will add 20,578 square feet of living space to the home. Other plans include the addition of a second pool and spa with an overflow waterfall feature.

When MacNeil paid $68.3 million for the house at 1940 S. Ocean Boulevard, it was the most expensive residential sale in the country during the month of February.

Two months later, he set another sales record when he sold a 3.5-acre oceanfront lot for $105 million. The sale of the property at 1120 S. Ocean Blvd. is the most paid for vacant land in Palm Beach County history.

When MacNeil bought what were two separate parcels last year, he razed two houses with plans to build a dream house for himself and his family. Instead, he sold the property to HSH-Sunshine Revocable Trust, pocketing $11.5 million. Hidden by the trust documents, the buyer’s identity is unknown. MacNeil is continuing to expand his footprint.

He is under contract to purchase a house on nearly 2 acres directly north of his recently purchased and growing estate for $36 million, the Wall Street Journal reported. The home is owned by car-dealership owner Ralph Gesualdo and his wife, Mary Gesualdo, who purchased the property for $10.3 million in 2020.

The purchase would bring MacNeil’s total oceanfront compound to nearly 8 acres. ★

Manalapan News

Manager gets pay boost — Manalapan Town Manager Eric Marmer will get a $40,000-a-year raise beginning Oct. 1, pushing his annual salary to $235,000, town commission members decided on June 23. Commissioners made no comments about Marmer’s performance or the 20.5% pay hike.

After serving about a year as assistant to longtime Town Manager Linda Stumpf, Marmer was promoted to the top job in September 2024 and given an annual salary of $170,000. That grew to $195,000 this year. While the commission signed off on a three-year deal, Marmer will be eligible for pay hikes each year of the contract.

At his new salary, Marmer will be paid less than the $255,200 that Highland Beach Town Manager Marshall Labadie is earning this year.

Eminent domain for Town Hall land — Plans to replace Town Hall moved closer to reality when a judge in June gave town leaders the go-ahead to seize the site of a former bank on South Ocean Boulevard for their new headquarters.

As ordered by Palm Beach County Circuit Judge Darren Shull, the town on June 23 deposited $2.85 million into the court registry so it can begin negotiating a sale price with the New York owners of the former bank in the Plaza del Mar. The roughly 1-acre site is across from the Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa, a short way north of the town’s cramped 45-year-old offices that have been plagued by air conditioning and drainage problems.

The town was forced to use eminent domain to seize the land when landowner Salute Realty LLC failed to respond to a purchase offer. Town attorney Keith Davis said price negotiations will begin soon. If no agreement can be reached, a jury would decide how much the town will be forced to pay.

Salute bought the former bank in 2019 for $1.2 million. Since then, property values in Manalapan have skyrocketed.

Town officials have said they will likely have to buy additional land in the plaza to accommodate city administrative offices as well as the police and fire departments. Town Manager Eric Marmer said plans likely will begin to take shape next year. — Jane Musgrave

Tax roll grows from previous estimate

Palm Beach County tax roll data, updated since estimates were released on May 27, show that countywide taxable property values increased 7.35% from 2025 to 2026, up from the 6.9% increase forecast in May.

The taxable property values are based on market conditions as of Jan. 1, 2026.

The revised numbers, released on June 25 by the county Property Appraiser’s Office, continue to show that all southeastern Palm Beach County municipalities posted property value gains except for South Palm Beach, which saw a decline of nearly 0.5%. The southeast county leader is Briny Breezes, with an 11.2% increase. It is followed by Gulf Stream, up 7.8%; Delray Beach, 7.5%; Lantana and Manalapan, both 6.9%; and Boca Raton, 6.6%.

Gulf Stream

Man eludes police — briefly — by fleeing in ride-share SUV

By Steve Plunkett

A man hiding from police behind Town Hall hailed a ride-share company and fled Gulf Stream, only to be caught after a foot chase near the Boynton Beach water tower.

Ja'Quez McMillian, 23, drove into town June 11 around 3:45 a.m. in a 2017 Chevrolet with a temporary tag, and Officer Josh Basante immediately spotted the vehicle and "recognized it didn't belong here," Police Chief Richard Jones said.

McMillian, who was accompanied by Serrina Albert, 19, drove off but was later spotted by license plate readers entering the Core district of town, Jones said. He had backed the Chevy into a driveway on Old School Road. As soon as Officer Tiara Hawkins approached, McMillian, who had recently been released from state prison, took off on foot. Albert was apprehended there, but McMillian "ended up hunkering down in some vegetation" behind Town Hall and a home on North County Road, Jones said.

"We don't know what his intentions were, but they weren't positive," the chief said.

The sheriff's helicopter was called in and officers on the ground scoured the area but could not find the 6-foot-5, 185-pound suspect.

"But an hour or so later, one of our Town Hall employees was paying attention to the cameras and noticed the individual enter a vehicle and flee the area in that vehicle — or attempt to," Jones said as part of his report to town commissioners the next day.

McMillian had ordered the escape vehicle, a black SUV, from the Lyft ride-share service with his cellphone, the chief said.

"By the time we were able to catch up to the vehicle, we were in the city of Boynton Beach," Jones continued. "I was actually the first one that spotted the suspect. He spotted me and we ended up in a foot pursuit down Seacrest near the water tower. This went on for a short distance before he went into a wooded area and was ultimately apprehended by a canine."

At the Old School Road residence, Jones discovered the home's power and phone lines had been cut, something he said burglars do to disable alarms and surveillance systems.

Police from Delray Beach, Ocean Ridge and Boynton Beach assisted in the search and capture.

McMillian was charged with violating probation, loitering and prowling, trespass, burglary, striking a police dog and resisting arrest without violence. He remained in the Palm Beach County Jail in late June. Albert, who told police she had met McMillian at a party, was charged with trespassing and released on her own recognizance.

"We definitely did not want him here in our community having the opportunity to commit crimes, and because of the officers' diligence and their quick response, he didn't have an opportunity to commit crimes," Jones said.

Mayor Scott Morgan agreed. "It could have been a bad situation and their diligence prevented any sort of untoward event. So our gratitude to them," Morgan said.

McMillian's criminal record includes two cases of robbery with a firearm or deadly weapon. The chief said Gulf Stream residents were notified to shelter in place via PBC Alerts a little after 6 a.m. that day and the alert was lifted about an hour later. But an all-clear message did not go out until the afternoon.

"I just want to remind everybody that in a small town like ours, your police chief is actively involved. And therefore, I don't have the opportunity sometimes to get those notifications with that courtesy information out as quickly as folks would like," Jones said. ★

Audit finds documentation gaps in credit card program; town says fixes are in place

By Sephora Charles

A Palm Beach County Inspector General's Office audit revealed that more than $11,000 of the town of Ocean Ridge's credit card usage could not be fully verified because documentation was missing or incomplete.

The audit, released June 2, reviewed the town's credit card transactions from October 2023 to June 2025. The review was done as part of the Inspector General's Office's fiscal year 2025 audit plan after a survey identified that Ocean Ridge did not have written policies for its credit card program. It was the town's first Inspector General audit since 2018.

The audit looked at 65 credit card transactions totaling $25,651.

Auditors examined whether credit card activities were properly documented, met applicable requirements and served a valid public purpose. While the report found most transactions met those standards, it revealed areas that needed improvement.

Among the findings, auditors found $4,343 in purchases that lacked detailed receipts and $6,720 that did not include sufficient explanations showing how the expenses served a public purpose. The report also found that the town paid $276.56 in sales taxes on purchases despite being exempt from state sales tax.

Some transactions appeared to be duplicated, but auditors could not verify that because supporting records were not available.

The report also found that Lynne Ladner, the town's former manager, approved her own purchasing card transactions. Auditors described the practice as "a lack of segregation of duties."

Prior to the audit, it was allowed for the town manager to make self-approved purchases, "as long as it was within and under the identified purchase authority," Town Manager Michelle Heiser said.

The absence of written procedures made it unclear what purchases were permissible, what documentation was required and who was responsible for reviewing expenses.

Auditors also found that Ocean Ridge lacked formal written policies for managing its information technology systems. While the audit noted that basic IT controls were in place, the report recommended adopting written procedures to strengthen tracking and oversight of technology systems.

The Inspector General's Office made four other recommendations to improve oversight, documentation requirements and avoid unnecessary sales tax payments.

The town adopted the suggestions, Heiser said. Ocean Ridge has adopted new policies requiring receipts for all purchases, written explanations outlining the public purpose of expenditures and independent review of credit card activities, according to the report. The town also created an IT policy meant to improve tracking and management of its systems. ★

New shop in Boca reflects 'huge role' of flowers in couple's life

French Florist, 5601 N. Federal Highway, Suite 9, Boca Raton, celebrated its grand opening in May. Owned and operated by Boca Raton residents Samantha and Ryan Garvey, the 1,000-square-foot boutique offers handcrafted arrangements, gifts and white-glove delivery service with the Garveys planning to personally hand-deliver many orders themselves.

"Flowers played a huge role in our relationship," said Ryan Garvey, 38. "When we were long-distance, sending flowers was how I showed up for Samantha. Before she moved to Florida (joining him in 2022), I realized how hard it was to find arrangements that felt thoughtful and special. French Florist was everything we felt was missing in our community."

Samantha Garvey, 34, has family roots related to a greenhouse in Dallas, where she worked in the IT industry. Ryan, who currently works both at French Florist and at Main Street Home Loans in Delray Beach, brings a personal tie to floristry as well.

His grandfather worked in a floral shop in Baltimore and later helped manage the U.S. National Arboretum in Washington, D.C.

Now, the couple is excited to channel their combined experiences into their new venture.

Soloviev is chairman of Soloviev Group. The buyers were John and Ana Davie. John Davie is the CEO and owner of Boston-based Buyers Edge Platform and CollectivIQ.ai.

Coldwell Banker Realty agent Jonathan Postma represented the seller in both deals, while Holly Meyer Lucas and Roxanne Chirico of Compass Florida worked with the buyers.

The larger home last traded for $4.99 million in 2020. Soloviev picked up the smaller home for $3.75 million in 2023.

Jeff Norman, a general contractor and head of JH Norman Construction Co., sold the 0.41-acre lot at 2408 E. Maya Palm Drive in Boca Raton's Royal Palm Yacht & Country Club for $15.5 million.

The new owner is 2408 East Maya Palm Road Land Trust, with Steven R. Dingle as trustee. Dingle is the head of Boca Raton-based SRD Building.

Norman paid $23.5 million in 2023 for a 0.83-acre lot and split it in two. He sold the first lot for $13.5 million in 2024 and now he's sold the second lot for $15.5 million, amounting to $29 million altogether.

The Seaside Deli property on State Road A1A south of Briny Breezes sold May 22 for $1.45 million. The 0.09-acre site with a 2,131-square-foot building at 4635 N. Ocean Blvd., Boynton Beach, was owned by Leonora and Rafael Belliard's Ocean Blvd 14 LLC.

The buyers are KMG Holdings (with a 10.19% undivided interest) and Goyhberg Investments (with an 89.81% undivided interest). Both are Florida limited liability companies, with an address at 1311 E. Atlantic Blvd., Pompano Beach, and managed by Mikhail Vesselov.

The Coastal Star has followed the saga of this property and Seaside Deli, a business that was once owned by Randy McCormick.

Seaside Deli had been a 20-year local favorite, but a dispute between the Belliards and McCormick resulted in the latter's January 2023 eviction. The deli reopened under new management the following month. That operation continued until the deli's closing this April.

Two years after Oracle co-founder Larry Ellison paid $277 million for the 310-room Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa in Manalapan, he's getting ready to give it a makeover.

If all goes as planned, in September work will begin to transform the guest rooms, hotel general manager Tim Nardi told the Town Commission on June 23.

The face-lift, which will take about two years to complete, will be done in phases, he said. Work will begin in the south tower, move to the north tower and then to the center tower.

Nardi declined to offer specifics or reveal how much the renovations would cost. The rooms will be modernized with the addition of state-of-the-art sound-proofing and lighting and transformed with the use of teak and oak wood furnishings. A second "mini" presidential suite is planned. "It's going to be really beautiful," he said.

The newly updated Eau Spa at Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa is offering two new treatments: the Psammo Quartz Ritual, which combines quartz immersion, inversion therapy and sound healing, and the Coastal Contour body treatment that includes a toning scrub and massage. Local soccer fans got the chance of a lifetime to see the World Cup's smallest qualifier make a big splash in Boca Raton

By Brian Biggane

The World Cup has come to America, and Boca Raton and Florida Atlantic University have made sure it has also had its moment in Palm Beach County.

Curaçao, an island nation off the coast of Venezuela with a population (160,000) smaller than that of Fort Lauderdale, became the smallest country ever to qualify for the world's biggest sporting event last November, whereupon FAU Athletic Director Brian White and the city of Boca Raton offered to become the team's U.S. host.

Curaçao accepted, joining England and Portugal, both of which set up base in Palm Beach Gardens, in calling Palm Beach County home.

The team arrived on June 8, and the next day held its first practice on the FAU football field; two days later it staged an open workout in front of a crowd limited to 5,000 before heading to its first-ever World Cup game vs. Germany in Houston.

Players gushed over what they saw moments before their first workout.

Wertheim donates record $100M to Baptist Health South Florida

Manalapan philanthropist Dr. Herbert “Herbie” Wertheim has given $100 million to Baptist Health South Florida to finance an expansion of cancer research, treatment and prevention.

The largest single donation in Baptist Health’s history will allow additional services at the Miami Cancer Institute, to be renamed for Wertheim, and bolster the nonprofit’s care network, BHSF leaders said at a May 20 news conference.

Wertheim, a billionaire who turned 87 on May 23, said, “My goal is to be able to do whatever I can to be transformative.”

The gift also will reinforce Baptist Health Research’s association with Florida International University’s Herbert Wertheim College of Medicine, named for the ophthalmologist/entrepreneur after he and his late ex-wife, Nicole, donated $20 million in 2009.

A decades-themed shindig is set to be held from 5 to 7:30 p.m. on July 11 at Crazy Uncle Mike’s, 6450 N. Federal Highway in Boca Raton.

Guests are invited to dress in styles from the ’70s all the way through 2010s and 2020s. There will be drinks, light bites and an auction to help the center support the more than 1,000 children it serves.

Tickets are $25 and $55 (VIP) and can be bought through secure.qgiv.com/event/livingourlegacy/

School supply drive now underway at Lang Realty

Lang Realty and Lang Management have kicked off their annual school supply drive for the benefit of the Education Foundation of Palm Beach County. Through July 31, the public is invited to drop off new school supplies at any Lang Realty or Lang Management office throughout the county.

The Education Foundation’s Red Apple Supplies campaign stocks a free resource store where teachers in Title I schools can shop for classroom materials at no cost to them.

“Giving back to the students and families of Palm Beach County is something Lang has always been committed to,” said Scott Agran, president of Lang Realty. “This drive is one tangible way we can make sure every child walks into the classroom this fall ready to learn and ready to thrive.”

Requested supplies include: backpacks, colored pencils and markers (8–12 count), wide-ruled composition books, construction paper, crayons, dry erase markers, erasers (wedge), flip chart markers, glue sticks, highlighters, pencils, Scotch tape, student dry erase boards (small), headphones/earbuds.

All donations will go directly to the Red Apple Supplies store.

Teen-led food drive nets 11,079 pounds of cereal

Cereal4All was founded in 2016 by Boca Raton twins Jett and Luke Justin, now 18. Their annual spring cereal drive collected 11,079 pounds for families served by Boca Helping Hands.

Boca Helping Hands, which began as a soup kitchen in 1998, provided more than 3.5 million meals to people in 2025.

The twins, now at the University of Florida, volunteered at BHH and learned that breakfast foods are among the most needed, but least donated, items at food banks.

“Cereal is about breakfast,” Jett Justin said, “but it’s also about starting the day with a sense of normalcy and happiness. It bothered us that so many families were missing out on that, so we started Cereal4All to help fill that gap.”

Today, Cereal4All partners with more than 175 schools and 95 food banks across 22 states, Toronto and the Bahamas through the twins’ self-piloted “Oatmeal Airlift” missions. The organization has delivered the equivalent of more than 800,000 bowls of cereal, over $400,000 worth of breakfast food, and inspired thousands of students to volunteer. See cereal4all.org to donate or volunteer.

When the Funky Biscuit opened in Boca Raton in mid-July of 2011, there were certainly no guarantees that the live music establishment and restaurant would still exist 15 years later.

Creative music in general, and full-band live music in particular, were just starting their slow decline in tourist-heavy South Florida. And the club, situated in a nook of Royal Palm Place amid shops and restaurants off Mizner Boulevard, isn't easy to find and thus doesn't exactly attract much drive-by or walk-in traffic.

Yet owner Al Poliak's only hiatus during the 15 years since was a brief, COVID-19-induced shutdown in 2020.

The Funky Biscuit started out of the gate as a blues venue, taking the baton (and multiple employees) from the Bamboo Room in Lake Worth Beach.

That club likewise featured touring artists, but was in the midst of an extended shutdown. It then went through a few different iterations before reopening as Rudy's at Bamboo in 2025, and now features local and regional acts.

Pictures on the walls from past performances at the Funky Biscuit tell the story of the past decade and a half. There are several Allman Brothers Band members (singing keyboardist Gregg Allman, drummer Butch Trucks, bassist Oteil Burbridge), roots music icons like Leon Russell, Tab Benoit and David Bromberg, jazz saxophonist Bill Evans, uncategorizable singer/guitarist Col. Bruce Hampton, and hundreds more.

Jazz/fusion stars from guitarists Larry Carlton, Wayne Krantz, Oz Noy and Greg Koch to drummers Billy Cobham, Dave Weckl, Dennis Chambers and Simon Phillips have dotted the calendar in recent years, and several smooth jazz artists are now draws.

"I'm from the Washington, D.C./Maryland area, where the music scene is very robust," says Poliak. "Many of the clubs there have live music every night, in all different genres. I've tried to copy that format down here, but South Florida wasn't ready for having live music six or seven nights a week. So it was a major force-feeding job at first, but people have slowly become accustomed to it."

A spacious stage, excellent PA system and sound engineers, and a creative menu of appetizers, salads, sandwiches, craft beers, wines and cocktails have helped

Mozart among offerings at Gingold festival

By Jan Engoren

"Music reminds us that we have far more in common than what separates us," says Grammy-nominated violinist Andrés Cárdenes.

He is the co-founder of the Josef Gingold Chamber Music Festival, which returns to South Palm Beach County for its third year this month with seven free or low-cost performances including a number of community engagement events.

Those community concerts will take place between July 7 and 19 at Alzheimer's Community Care in Boca Raton, Temple Sinai of Palm Beach County and the Shirley and Barton Weisman Community Center, both in Delray Beach.

Founded in Miami in 2017, the festival is a program of violinist Elmar Oliveira's Elevar Foundation, which brings emerging artists together with internationally acclaimed performers and honors the memory of Russian-American violinist Josef Gingold (1909-1995), a mentor to many, including Cárdenes.

Cárdenes is the primary heir to Gingold's technique, vision and philosophy of violin playing and a belief in music as a profound form of human connection.

He also chaired the jury for the 2026 Elmar Oliveira International Violin Competition, another Elevar Foundation initiative, and has served on juries for the prestigious Tchaikovsky and Stradivarius international violin competitions.

For dog days of summer, Glazer Hall to howl with sounds of jazz

By Bill Meredith
ArtsPaper Music Writer

Summer is usually a dormant season for South Florida musicians. Especially jazz musicians, who frequently perform in establishments that sometimes eliminate live entertainment during summers because most tourists have left for cooler climates.

Which means that area fans of one of America's greatest audio art forms are also figuratively left out in the cold while bearing the brunt of the seasonal heat.

Yet Glazer Hall in Palm Beach offers a cool remedy for area jazz lovers, whether musicians or listeners; locals or visitors.

Its inaugural Summer Jazz

Series features three preeminent South Florida jazz artists — the Yvette Norwood-Tiger Jazz Ensemble, the Copeland Davis Ensemble, and Troy Anderson and the Wonderful World Band — every other Wednesday between July 8 and Aug. 5.

Curated in partnership with the Palm Beach International Jazz Festival (the annual event presented every spring in celebration of UNESCO's International Jazz Day), the series also includes an alternative to the theater seating at the former Royal Poinciana Playhouse.

The new waterfront venue's additional jazz club seating allows patrons to enjoy snacks and drinks from the lobby bar at cabaret-style tables during the shows.

"We wanted to do something fun during the summer months that showcased incredible talent and is an easy night out after work," says Glazer Hall's executive director Allison Stockel.

"This is more than just catching a great show, it is a place to meet other people and just enjoy the waterfront view, a drink on the terrace, and feel like you're in a jazz club in New York City."

In addition to being the founder and director of the Palm Beach International Jazz Festival, Norwood-Tiger is an award-winning multilingual jazz vocalist, recording artist, songwriter, international touring

Film Review

Here is an excerpt from a recent review in Palm Beach ArtsPaper. For the full review, visit palmbeachartspaper.com.

Disclosure Day (now playing)

Disclosure Day may be a more important movie than a successful one.

This isn't to say that Steven Spielberg's latest dive into what ET enthusiasts refer to as "the phenomenon" is not, by and large, a successful work of both art and entertainment. But its cultural impact far outweighs the typical barometers of triumphs and misfires with which we judge movies.

Disclosure Day is hulking and ambitious enough to contain many of both, but it's the feeling of emerging from the cinema dazed, maybe a little confused, and quite possibly changed that will be the lasting impact of this rare specimen, a vital popcorn picture.

Given Spielberg's past approaches to the alien question, his sincerity, curiosity and, yes, sentimentality should never have been in doubt. His War of the Worlds remake serving as the exception proving the rule, Spielberg's worldview, from Close Encounters of the Third Kind to E.T. to A.I. Artificial Intelligence, has presented off-world life as peaceful, not destructive. Anyone expecting to see malicious Martians evaporating U.S. cities will be mighty disappointed.

In fact, even those hoping for a movie populated by advanced beings or spectacular craft will leave the cinema with only scant presentation. Yet it's a film steeped in lore, with Easter eggs aplenty for those educated on the subject.

But this is a film about us, not them. It's about the layers of compartmentalized obfuscation maintained by the U.S. government. Josh O'Connor plays Daniel Kellner, a cybersecurity expert for a government contractor called Wardex, who absconds with USB drives containing his organization's entire trove of ET evidence, dating back to the Roswell crash of 1947.

Daniel's motivations as a whistleblower are noble: The public, "all 8.5 billion of us," deserve to know that we're not alone in the universe. Daniel is among 12 Wardex defectors, including Colman Domingo's Hugo Wakefield, who controls their operation from a warehouse where a mysterious set is being built.

While Spielberg usually excels in opening acts, the Snowden-esque gambit of Daniel's escape with the precious loot is the movie's weakest tea. In it, we're introduced to the film's chief nemesis, Wardex head Noah Scanlon, played by Colin Firth with all of the subtlety of a megalomaniacal Marvel villain. They scramble over a MacGuffin-like handheld device that, we'll learn, grants the holder supernatural powers.

O'Connor is not at his best here; his reticence as unwitting hero comes across as affectless and lacking the presence to carry the film.

It takes the appearance of the deservedly ballyhooed Emily Blunt, who is already earning Oscar buzz, to lift Disclosure Day into a more vaunted place in its storytelling and characterization. In a parallel narrative, she plays Margaret Fairchild, a bubbly meteorologist for a Kansas City news station whose ambitions have begun to clash with those of her musician boyfriend, Jackson (Wyatt Russell), who is just finding his footing in the K.C. scene.

These are just the sort of real-world people, their complications presented in smart and concise exposition from screenwriter David Koepp, that had been lacking in the film's other plot.

Margaret's arc grows even more compelling after she develops psychic abilities beyond all comprehension and meets Daniel, whose aptitude for mathematics likewise expands beyond human knowledge.

We won't spoil the ending, but suffice it to say it's one of the director's signature accomplishments over a more than 50-year career, as well as one of the most deftly edited montages in recent cinema history. For all its imperfections, this is a film that aspires to heal a fractured nation. It's the movie we all need to see. — Palm Beach ArtsPaper Staff fuel that effort.

As has local talent, mostly booked on weeknights. For Boynton Beach-based singing multi-instrumentalist Richie Schmidt, the Funky Biscuit has practically become a personal house gig. His band the Fabulous Fleetwoods, one of the longest-standing blues acts in South Florida, is a frequent booking.

Schmidt has also been part of multiple stagings of The Last Waltz, director Martin Scorsese's documentary about the 1976 farewell concert by The Band at the Winterland Ballroom in San Francisco.

More frequent is the duo Twocan Blue with his wife, singing keyboardist Tess Schmidt. The couple has provided weekly Friday happy hour entertainment for 14 years, with Richie alternating among guitar, flute, mandolin, harmonica and violin.

And then there's his front man status in the Funky Biscuit Allstars. That group has gone from playing Monday nights backing area jam musicians, with no admission, to becoming a major ticketed draw — all because of Schmidt and fellow musicians like guitarists Drew Preston and Jeffrey James Harris, keyboardists Bob Taylor and Mitch Farber, bassists Tom Snellgrove and Mark Telesca, drummer Antony Livoti, and other major South Florida talents who've rotated through its expert cover band personnel.

Ask for an Allman Brothers Band classic, for example, and you're literally in good hands.

Berman, frequents the Funky Biscuit — and he certainly knows quality music when he hears it.

"They're literally helping to keep live music alive," Berman says about the Funky Biscuit Allstars.

For its 15th, the Funky Biscuit continues the Allman Brothers Band's legacy. One of the greatest of American groups in any genre, the Allmans emerged from Macon, Ga., and reigned over the international Southern rock and jam band scenes from 1969-2014 — in spite of deaths, replacements, personal struggles and hiatuses — by adding elements of blues, jazz, country, gospel and beyond. And four consecutive nights of the tribute act Trouble No More offer a prolonged salute from July 15-18.

The band's lineup features sons of Allmans bass-playing alumni in vocalist Lamar Williams Jr. and bassist Berry Duane Oakley, plus singing guitarists Brandon "Taz" Niederauer (a rising star at age 23) and Quinn Sullivan, Grammy Award-nominated keyboardist Peter Levin, drummer Aaron "Bucky" Buckingham, and special guests.

Her presentation of “Billie, Ella, Nina & I” on July 8 salutes a significant portion of the transplanted Detroit native’s roots. Norwood-Tiger’s interpretations of legendary jazz vocalists Billie Holiday, Ella Fitzgerald and Nina Simone have already made her a favorite with South Florida audiences. Her intonation, scat-singing and storytelling capabilities, while backed by her ever-talented jazz ensemble, will be on full display.

Pianist Davis, a South Florida legend, performs July 22. The Florida native studied music at Florida Atlantic University in Boca Raton, then relocated to areas including Sin City before he found South Florida calling him back.

“I’m originally from Orlando,” he says, “but lived and performed in Las Vegas at rooms like the Stardust and Holiday International from 1978 to 1982 before moving to Massachusetts. I’d studied music in Palm Beach County, and love it here, so I moved back in 2003.”

The dazzling pianist has also written arrangements for 1970s pop vocal hit-makers The Fifth Dimension, released multiple albums, and appeared on The Tonight Show and Good Morning, America. Most recently, his medleys of jazz and pop classics have been presented during a long-standing house gig at Cafe Centro in West Palm Beach, often in the restaurant’s appropriately titled Legends Room.

on Aug. 5, trumpeter and vocalist Troy Anderson brings “Satchmo” to life. Backed by his Wonderful World Band, Anderson is known throughout South Florida and beyond for re-creating both the fiery trumpet playing and trademark vocal growl of Armstrong — perhaps the most influential instrumental and singing combination in jazz history.

A former paratrooper, Anderson fell in love with Armstrong’s music while playing with the United States Army’s 2nd Armored Division Jazz Band in Germany. His career as one of the world’s top “Pops” interpreters has soared ever since. Guests can even enjoy a specialty cocktail, the Orange Satchmo, named in honor of the late New Orleans native.

“We’re thrilled to be here in the community and bring music to the area, especially in the summer when there’s not much classical music around,” says Jill Arbetter, executive director of the Elevar Foundation and a former violinist with the Zurich Opera and Berlin Symphony Orchestra.

In keeping with this year’s theme of “The Next Generation,” Cárdenes says, “We wanted to create programs that connect generations of musicians through some of the greatest works in the chamber music repertoire.”

Central to the program are works by Mozart because, Cárdenes says, his works “demand clarity, communication and collaboration.”

“These are qualities that are essential to chamber music,” he says. These works provide the opportunity for established artists and emerging performers to share the stage and engage in a meaningful artistic dialogue, he adds.

The works include a wide-ranging survey of the chamber music repertoire, from Mozart’s “Dissonance” Quartet to the Romantic breadth of Brahms, Rachmaninov, Schumann, and Chausson. Concerts will be performed at a variety of venues, including Lynn University and the Boca Raton Museum of Art.

The program opens with a recital July 7 by EOIVC laureate and emerging artist Julia Jones and continues July 9 with “Jewish Prayers and Celebrations,” with music by Bruch, Bloch, and Israeli composer Paul Ben-Haim.

That concert is followed by two “Mozartiade” programs devoted to the music of Mozart, and three “Romantic Tapestries” concerts, culminating in Chausson’s Concerto for Violin, Piano, and String Quartet.

In addition to Cárdenes, those artists include violinists Jones, Gary Levinson and Erica Richardson; violists Michael Klotz and Jack Kessler; cellists Sara Sant’Ambrogio and Anne Martindale Williams; and pianists Robert Koenig and Sheng-Yuan Kuan.

Cárdenes says he is particularly excited to welcome Kessler and Jones, fourth-prize winner at this year’s Oliveira Competition, and former student Erica Lynn.

“Seeing former students return as artistic colleagues is especially rewarding and speaks to the continuity of the chamber music tradition,” Cárdenes says. “The festival is not only about celebrating great music, but also about nurturing the artists who will carry that tradition forward.”

He’s grateful for the opportunity to bring the series back to Boca Raton this year and says that being under the Elevar Foundation umbrella has given the festival the support it needs to grow.

“It is incredibly gratifying to be welcomed in the community,” he says. “From the beginning, our goal was to build a festival that honored Josef Gingold’s artistic legacy while creating something meaningful for the South Florida community.

“Seeing the festival continue to grow — and feeling the community’s support behind it — has been very gratifying,” he adds.

For the full schedule and details, please visit the Gingold Festival website at www.elevarfoundation.org/jgcmf. While the concerts are free or low-cost, guests are asked to pre-register.

Paws Up for Pets

Preparation, communication can save pets from house fires

When you see or hear the words, “firefighters” and “dogs,” you may conjure an image of a happy Dalmatian inside a fire station.

But the sad reality is that each year, more than 40,000 dogs, cats and other household pets become injured or die in house fires across the country.

And here’s another scary stat: Pets cause more than 1,000 house fires annually, according to the National Fire Protection Association and the American Veterinary Medical Association.

July 15 is national Pet Fire Safety Day. In Palm Beach County, local fire departments are doing their part to rescue pets in house fires. Many rescuers have their own pets.

“One of the biggest problems we encounter with house fires is that pets inside get scared and may be hard to find with the fire and smoke,” says Boca Raton Fire Rescue Lt. Karl Richards. “A big issue with house fires is smoke inhalation. It does not take a lot to be overcome by the carbon monoxide in the smoke. The more smoke pets inhale, the more lethal it becomes.”

Adds Tyeisha Knight, community resilience manager for the Delray Beach Fire Rescue Department: “In a house fire, frightened pets are likely to hide in places where they feel safe and protected. Common hiding spots include under beds, inside closets, behind furniture or in cabinets or other small, enclosed spaces. This can make it difficult for family members and firefighters to locate them quickly during an emergency.”

Highland Beach Fire Rescue Chief Glenn Joseph urges residents to not only have smoke detectors, carbon monoxide detectors and fire extinguishers inside their homes, but to test them regularly. Consider doing this twice a year, say when you need to change your clocks in the spring and the fall.

He adds that the most common culprits are kitchen fires, space heaters tipped over, forgetting to clean chimney flues, plus electrical cord shorts.

“A dog or a cat can bump or paw a stovetop knob and accidentally turn it on. That can lead to a fire,” says Joseph. “Or a cat can paw or a dog’s tail can knock over a lit candle and start a fire quickly.”

During a house fire, quickly escape and alert firefighters about what pets are in the home and where they tend to hide.

“Tell the responder that your dog usually hides under a table or under the bed or in the closet when scared,” says Joseph.

To reduce pet-caused house fires, local firefighters recommend that you:

- Have a family escape plan and practice evacuating the entire family, including the pets.
- Keep leashes and pet carriers close to an exit so you can use them to get your frightened pets out quickly.

- Consider using flameless or LED candles in the home instead of flame-burning ones.
- If possible, condition your dog or cat to the piercing sounds of a smoke detector. Reward them with treats when they come to you or go into a safe spot such as in the bathroom or in an open pet crate upon hearing the noise.

- Install child-safety covers on stove knobs or remove the knobs when you’re not actively cooking.

- Secure electrical cords with covers to keep pets from checking the cords and causing sparks or fires.

Knight, who has been with Delray Beach Fire Rescue for four years, shares her home with Bella, her 8-year-old pit bull.

“To help keep Bella safe while we are home, she has been trained to stay out of the kitchen,” she says. “When we are away from home, Bella stays in her own room with a safety gate in place.”

Make sure all your pets sport identification tags bearing your name and cellphone number so that your pets can be more easily reunited with you should they dart out during a house fire.

Consider placing stickers on windows that indicate the type and number of pets you have in your home to alert firefighters.

In Highland Beach and many other municipalities in Florida, residents can place household information such as pet descriptions in a secure portal called Community Connect that can be quickly accessed by first responders during an emergency. Consult your city or town for more details on how to register.

“If we get an emergency call to your address, that information immediately goes to the first responders heading to the scene,” says Joseph. “This is a great and safe program.”

Final good news: More fire departments are equipping their trucks with various sized pet oxygen masks and ensuring their staffs complete pet first aid/CPR classes.

FAU grad shows how one person's kindness has ripple effects

Every month in this column we talk about the health part of Health and Harmony. This month, we're focusing on the harmony — through the work of Boynton Beach resident Rayna Rose Exelbierd, 34, whose nonprofits, The Rose Grows and Teen Tribe, along with her children's books are inspiring young people to believe that one person's actions can make a meaningful difference.

The granddaughter of Holocaust survivors, Exelbierd grew up in Memphis and moved to Florida for college. She graduated from FAU in 2015 with a degree in business. After several years of working in the nonprofit world mentoring students, she saw a growing need to teach leadership, self-confidence, kindness, understanding and diversity to children.

Exelbierd's work is part of a larger movement to teach kindness as a discipline.

In June, the Boca Raton Museum of Art and Kindness Matters offered a four-part series titled "Practicing Kindness: Deepening Brain Regulation," designed to support emotional well-being, self-awareness and meaningful connection through practicing kindness.

More than 55 participants signed up, and a second series is planned for the fall.

David Matteson, director of learning and engagement at the museum, believes that teaching kindness and art go hand in hand.

"Art can help us build stronger, more empathetic relationships with ourselves and one another," he says. "Many people are feeling overwhelmed or divided, and there is a real need for spaces like museums that encourage respite and reflection."

He hopes participants leave feeling more connected to themselves and to the museum and learn practical tools such as pausing before reacting, listening more generously, or noticing opportunities to express gratitude in everyday life.

It's the same philosophy that drives Exelbierd's work — that one person's act of kindness can have ripple effects on a child's or other person's life.

"I came across a poem I wrote five years ago about my dad, who died when I was 27," she said. "That poem inspired me to write my first book, The Girl Who Said Hello to Everyone: Teaching Kids Kindness, Conversation and Resilience."

The book is dedicated to Delray Beach probate attorney Pamela Higer-Polani and her

"Rayna lives up to the meaning of her name — queen," says Higer-

Empowering Kids to Celebrate Standing Out Instead of Trying to Fit In. It teaches empathy and the importance of embracing individuality. Both books are illustrated by her childhood friend, Allyn Chapman Fraser.

This year, Exelbierd's nonprofit The Rose Grows ("Where One Grows, We All Grow") distributed 8,000 books to public elementary school students from underserved backgrounds. She estimates she has spoken to more than a quarter million youth around the world over the last decade about leadership and understanding differences.

Exelbierd is also helping 96-year-old Holocaust survivor Anya Baum write her memoir and is at work on her third children's book, tentatively titled The Girl Who Said I Can't Run.

Locally, she has provided copies of her books to the Education Foundation of Palm Beach County, which distributes backpacks of school supplies to children. And she is partners with Junior Achievement of the

Erica Eggerman, director of elementary programs for the local Junior Achievement, says, "Rayna's partnership has been invaluable in helping us create experiences that are not only educational, but truly transformational."

At StandWithUs, an international organization that combats antisemitism, Exelbierd met and mentored Miami native Danielle Yablonka, 25, who was immediately struck by her energy and presence.

"The minute I met Rayna and saw the way she sparked in a room, I knew I had to meet her," Yablonka says. "She was wearing a neon pink dress, basketball sneakers and a floppy hat — and her speech was so inspiring."

"Rayna gave me my first public speaking opportunity and encouraged me to tell my story," adds Yablonka, who graduated from FAU in 2023 with a degree in communications and Jewish studies. "I wouldn't be where I am without her."

Exelbierd says she is inspired most by women who champion other women, such as Spanx creator Sara Blakely for being real, vulnerable, funny and hardworking, as well as by Blakely's husband, Jesse Itzler, an author and entrepreneur. They motivated her to "chase my dreams."

Exelbierd believes that when people bring their diverse talents and backgrounds together, they can support one another in reaching goals and overcoming challenges. She signs all her books, "You are just a hello away from new friends and adventures."

Her personal motto — "Never dimmer your shimmer" — reflects the resilience she considers her greatest accomplishment. Not giving up, she says, is what allows her to keep helping children discover their self-confidence and their voice.

"I'm so blessed if I can inspire even one child to think bigger in their own life," she says.

Dive shops offer gear, training, guiding for lobster mini-season

For most Palm Beach County scuba divers, the annual two-day lobster mini-season is the highlight of their year.

Not only is it the first opportunity to catch lobsters since the regular season closed on April 1, but it also allows underwater hunters to keep 12 of the tasty crustaceans a day, which is twice the regular season daily bag limit of six per person.

That will have local divers, as well as visiting divers from everywhere, heading to the coral reefs spanning from Boca Raton to Jupiter in search of a lobster dinner during the mini-season, which is July 29-30.

Steven Constantiner, the owner of Force-E Scuba Centers, calls it the “World Cup of lobstering,” a timely reference to the excitement that soccer fans are currently experiencing during that sport’s biggest event.

That makes July the busiest month for Constantiner’s dive shops, which are in Boca Raton, Boynton Beach, Riviera Beach, Pompano Beach and Fort Lauderdale, with a sixth scheduled to open this month in Jupiter, as divers get their air tanks filled and scuba gear checked in time for opening day.

If you’ve never caught lobsters during mini-season, whether it’s because you haven’t tried it before or because you stink at it, Force-E’s training director Nikole Heath said the stores not only can get you prepared and book dives on local charter boats, they also can guide you to a successful mini-season.

“We have certified diving professionals, instructors that teach underwater hunting,” Heath said, noting that Force-E (www.force-e.com) also has lobster-hunting guides to help you catch lobsters just as fishing guides help you catch fish.

“You can actually just hire them to come out for the day

Nikole Heath, Force-E training director, shows a lobster she caught during a mini-season. BELOW: Force-E Scuba Centers staffers inspect air tanks, a process fill stations require annually. Lobster mini-season is July 29-30. Photos provided for your mini-season and you’ll catch everything together. That’s something pretty different. So instead of an instructor teaching you how to dive, they actually take you out hunting for lobsters.”

Heath, who also handles marketing and social media for Force-E — the YouTube channel @ForceEDivers has an abundance of videos on everything from scuba gear and travel destinations to spearfishing and sea turtles — said the company has professionals who can help set up your boat for mini-season.

That could include checking safety items such as first aid and oxygen kits to securing air tanks, so they don’t roll around or fall over in choppy seas.

Speaking of air tanks, Heath said all the Force-E stores will have extended hours both days of mini-season to fill tanks. It’s wise to bring in your tanks well in advance of mini-season to get them inspected and filled, or replaced if they’re unsafe.

“Any fill station requires a visual inspection of tanks once a year,” Heath said, explaining that tanks need to be checked for pitting, rust, cracks and even insects such as spiders that crawl into them. She added that for mini-season, Force-E will inspect two tanks for the price of one inspection.

If you haven’t dived since last year’s mini-season or longer, you also need to have your dive gear inspected. Something as simple as a worn-out O-ring in a regulator can keep you from diving. Air hoses that have leaks can be deadly — you might not be able to breathe underwater or get back to the water’s surface.

Heath said if your diving skills are a little rusty, it’s a good idea to dive with an instructor, whether it’s off a boat or from the beach.

“We get a lot of people who come out for mini-season and they’re like, ‘My last dive was 10 years ago.’ We really try and emphasize that people do refresher dives with us before mini-season or even get their rescue diver certification so that they’re a more well-rounded diver,” Heath said. “We want you to get your lobsters and we want you to be safe.”

Donation of old kimonos connects Jewish, Japanese cultures

In an act of cultural compassion, eagle-eyed Eric Goldman, vice president of retail services at the Levis Jewish Community Center's Resale Boutique, rescued two kimonos left in a plain, unmarked cardboard box by the back door of the store in east Boca Raton.

Goldman's experience told him these garments might have real cultural significance, so he reached out to James Rodgers, the collection manager at the Morikami Museum and Japanese Gardens in Delray Beach, who invited Goldman to meet. Jennifer Giacone, the Levis JCC's chief marketing and communications officer, was there.

"When I saw what Eric presented and how it was handled, it was really extraordinary. We watched the staff at Morikami put on white cotton gloves so carefully, almost reverently, and then look at these two artifacts, really examining them and trying to point out where historically they belonged. It was a very special moment."

On initial examination, Rodgers said, they knew little about the pieces. The black kimono was a kurotomesode, "a very formal type of kimono typically worn at weddings by the mother or grandmother of the bride or groom. This one is particularly formal," he said.

Kimonos are deeply symbolic, reflecting artistry, tradition and critical life moments, Rodgers said. This kimono probably belonged to an important family because of the presence of five "mon," the family's emblem or symbol, that were included.

"In Japanese it's called maruni tachi omodaka, which in English translates to standing arrowhead in a circle. It denotes that they might have come from a samurai family. They were probably middle class to wealthy."

Rodgers thinks the family may have had to sell the kimono during or after the war. "When the U.S. military was occupying Japan after World War II, a lot of families, particularly those in areas that were bombed or destroyed, found themselves on really hard times and ended up having to sell their precious family belongings to U.S. soldiers just to survive. The soldiers brought them back to the United States as souvenirs," he said.

The museum has gotten kimonos before that were carried home by servicemen.

"We've been collecting kimonos from the very beginning, since 1976," Rodgers said. "We get kimonos fairly often, but because our collection is fairly large, we don't put too many into the collection."

The second kimono was an uchikake, or wedding kimono, Rodgers said. "Daughters in samurai families would have a very formal kimono that they would wear when they get married. You'll see the sleeves are very long, which indicates that the woman who wore it was unmarried. This one is quite colorful with a four seasons theme, so you have spring, fall and summer colors, different flowers and plants that give it that year-round, very seasonal motif," he said. "In our collection, we have about 25 or so more modern uchikake; this is a good example of one of the older ones."

This was the JCC's first interaction with the Morikami, but it has already opened doors between the two groups.

"I'm delighted to say that as an outgrowth of that experience, we're in contact with Miwako Patton to pursue some opportunities through our Sandler Center for Arts, Culture and Learning," Giacone said. "We're brainstorming ideas; maybe a JCC series at Morikami or guided tours of the museum and gardens."

A shared history and intersections of the cultures can be explored, Giacone said.

"Years ago, we had a film festival that screened a film about a courageous Japanese diplomat who saved thousands of Jews in Lithuania. He was an unsung hero who understood this is not OK and helped save people who were running for their lives."

The film, 2015's Persona Non Grata, tells the story of Japanese diplomat Chiune Sugihara, who defied orders and issued more than 2,000 transit visas to Jewish refugees, allowing them to travel through Japanese territory. He risked his career and his family to save people fleeing Poland and Lithuania. Experts estimate he saved more than 6,000 lives before the Nazis invaded Lithuania a year later in 1941.

"They were very interested in screening that film with us. I think that there's a lot of opportunity for us to partner on, to present our community with opportunities to learn about different cultures and the intersections between them," Giacone said.

Rodgers agrees it's important to foster local relationships. "We took the kimono because we wanted to build a relationship with the JCC," he said. "It's always good when museums and nonprofit organizations work together. With that in mind, we took this into the collection."

Giacone agrees. "South Palm Beach County is an extremely culturally rich area. We have such amazing cultural and educational opportunities here. I think cultivating that is going to go a long way to really fostering better understanding of one another."

"I think people sometimes are afraid of what they don't understand, and so by opening these doors to understanding, we learn more about one another and we appreciate each other's cultures. It makes us a better community."

Of course, Giacone can't help but see divine intervention at work. "Everything lined up the way it was supposed to. Eric saw something special. He reached out. We connected. All the stars aligned for that."

The Morikami Museum and Japanese Gardens currently has an exhibition of uchikake called "Threads of Silver and Gold," which runs until Sept. 20. Five uchikake, each with a different motif, are on display. Around mid-July, the museum will switch them out and display five more. Visit the museum at 4000 Morikami Park Road, Delray Beach. For more info on the exhibit, visit morikami.org/current-exhibitions/.

Alpert JFS honors county's Holocaust survivors

The Ferd & Gladys Alpert Jewish Family Service honored nearly 100 Holocaust survivors from Palm Beach County during its sixth annual Holocaust Survivor Day, held June 4 at Temple Beth Tikvah in Lake Worth Beach.

Established in 2021 to recognize and lift up Holocaust survivors with a day of celebration and appreciation, the event featured a tribute to the significance of Holocaust Survivor Day and a presentation of proclamations by Palm Beach County and the state of Florida. But the highlight of the event was the recognition of the survivors in attendance. It included a musical performance by Gyorgy Lakatos. More than

Study shows prayer calms patients, lessens pain

There's scientific evidence of the power of prayer.

A randomized controlled trial conducted at the University of Maryland School of Medicine has found that a five-minute session of proximal intercessory prayer (PIP) — in-person prayer offered by a trained volunteer — significantly reduced pain and anxiety in primary care patients. The study published in the May/June 2026 issue of The Annals of Family Medicine is among the first randomized controlled trials of PIP conducted in a standard primary care setting.

Prayer is the most common form of complementary medicine used in the United States. About 43% of people report using prayer to lessen pain or relieve anxiety. But it's hard to show it works.

This study said positive results were reported by both the pain and anxiety groups. The pain group reported significantly greater pain reductions immediately after the session and at the two-week follow-up. The anxiety group participants showed significantly greater reductions in anxiety scores immediately after their treatment. This effect persisted at two- and six-week follow-ups, suggesting durable effects lasting at least a month and a half for the anxiety group.

According to the study, prayer worked regardless of the patient's faith — or lack of faith. Research suggests that prayer influences the brain in several ways: It strengthens neural pathways of peace and gratitude and lowers stress by calming the parasympathetic nervous system, which lowers levels of cortisol, the body's primary stress hormone. It also promotes empathy and social connection because we often pray for others' needs as well as our own.

So, a quick, drug-free, cost-effective answer to pain and anxiety might be as close as a friend who knows how to pray. And you can help. Many church

WORLD CUP

Juninho Bacuna said. “The pitch is amazing.”

“This is typical America,” goalkeeper Tyrick Bodak added. “You watch the movies and it’s always this kind of environment. It’s great to be here and feel it for myself instead of watching on TV.”

Curaçao was part of the Netherlands Antilles chain until becoming independent in 2010. While a number of its natives have played professionally in Europe, Curaçao had never enjoyed even regional success prior to hiring legendary coach Dick Advocaat in January 2024.

Advocaat, who had previously coached the Netherlands and South Korea in World Cups, stepped down to spend time with his ailing daughter in February of this year but returned in May when her condition improved. He has become the oldest coach in World Cup history at 78.

After three wins and two ties in its first five qualifying matches, Curaçao faced host Jamaica on Nov. 18 needing only a tie to advance and got it with a 0-0 result.

“We ran on the pitch, jumping, shouting, crying,” Bodak said. “Every emotion you could have was there.”

That was away, but home fans — an estimated 6,000 of whom traveled to Houston for the first World Cup match — got to share in the excitement when Curaçao beat Aruba 4-0 in its send-off game.

“After that we drove to the hotel and people were lined up in the streets, singing, dancing,” Bodak said.

A number of blue Curaçao jerseys were on hand at the open practice at FAU — the team’s nickname is “The Blue Wave” — and many of the natives now living in Florida made a point

Boca watch party

What: Watch party for World Cup quarterfinal game at Hard Rock Stadium in Miami Gardens.

When: Doors open at 4 p.m. Match begins at 5 p.m. on Saturday, July 11.

Where: Mizner Park Amphitheater, 590 Plaza Real, Boca Raton.

Notable: Event is part of Boca Raton’s Summer in the City series. Food and entertainment will be featured.

Admission: Free.

to be there. Among them was Rustico DeJesus, who lives in Jacksonville but frequently does business in Riviera Beach.

A single goal is a victory

Reminded that virtually no one expected the World Cup newcomers to advance from their group, DeJesus said his hopes remained high.

“They made it this far, so they have a chance. The first game some of the big teams stumble, so we’re hoping that happens. Just to get here is a celebration.”

Players also expressed confidence.

“If we get one goal it’s already a party,” Bodak said. “It’s our first time, so how is everyone going to react?”

As it turned out, they did get the one goal against Germany to forge a 1-1 tie midway through the first half of their game in Houston, prompting Fox broadcaster Ian Darke to say if they did pull off the upset it would be the biggest in the 96-year history of the World Cup. Four-time champion Germany regrouped, however, and ultimately went on to win 7-1.

Curacao was much more competitive in its remaining two games, earning its first point in the standings with a 0-0 tie against South American power Ecuador and then falling 2-0 to Ivory Coast in its finale — failing to advance in the competition.

Connecting with kids

Back at the practice, an assistant coach explaining the rules and narrating the action kept the crowd engaged. The players appreciated it.

“We felt the energy and atmosphere with a little taste of the island,” winger Kenji Gorre said.

About one-fourth of the crowd was made up of youth players, some intent on collecting stickers featuring World Cup stars that were part of a soft drink promotion.

But one group stood out: Players on two Boca Raton 10-and-under teams in their yellow game uniforms joined the Curaçao players on the field for a joint workout afterward.

Gorre said he and his teammates embraced the opportunity. “It’s a huge opportunity, because you can impact the next generation.

“This is a story of hope; this is a story of making your dreams come true. And when that’s translated into the youth, it’s just amazing. We can show them that your dreams are possible. Anything is possible if you believe.” ★
