Deputy kills man who tried to take her car, gun

'This guy was intent on getting that gun,' sheriff says

By Emily Rose Finn and Mary Thurwachter

A deputy responding to a request for assistance from a man who walked up to the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office substation in South Palm Beach soon found herself in a life-or-death struggle with the man.

The 32-year-old man said he needed her car and, when told that wasn't going to happen, he lunged at her for her gun, Sheriff Ric Bradshaw said during a news conference describing the Sept. 17 incident.

The man knocked the deputy over backward and started pummeling her while on top of her, but the deputy was able to get control of her gun and shot the man in the chest, killing him.

"This could have gone very, very bad for this female deputy," Bradshaw said. "She literally was fighting for her life. She did a good job just making sure that she was going to survive."

The man was identified as Rex Alexander Magann, who officials said had been "Baker acted" —

Power struggle?

Local governments view tax relief on ballot as state threat to their authority

By Rich Pollack

It has been a sore spot bothering local government leaders for decades.

Home rule, the ability for cities, counties and towns to make key decisions affecting their residents, has been eroding with state leaders in Tallahassee invading the authority of local elected officials, many say.

Under current legislation, for example, most Florida municipalities are prohibited from passing more restrictive land use regulations, at least until next year, and are stopped from banning short-term vacation rentals, such as an Airbnb. State laws also prohibit municipalities from enacting any regulations on firearms and ammunition.

"Home rule is constantly being eroded by legislative acts, unfunded mandates, legislative constraints and regulatory rules that preempt local decision making and budgeting and funding decisions," says South Palm Beach Town Manager Jamie Titcomb.

Complaints put ball in commission's court

Management of city's tennis centers criticized

By Brian Biggane

It was supposed to be a slam dunk, or to be more precise, an overhead smash.

When the Delray Beach City Commission met for one of its August meetings, JCD Sports Group, which has run the tennis facilities at the Delray Tennis Center and Delray Swim and Tennis Center since 1996, was poised to be awarded another 10-year contract.

Then people started complaining. And Mayor Tom Carney took notice, asking the commission to take its own look to see if the company was the best choice of all the applicants.

Then Jules Schlecker came to the microphone at the Aug. 18 meeting, with harsh criticisms, claiming that dozens of female players plus three coaches had left the city's courts in the past year and moved to Boynton Beach's tennis facility.

One of those coaches, David Sall, who spent two years at the club south of Linton Boulevard commonly known as "Swim," didn't hold back when returning a call from The Coastal Star.

"It's a toxic atmosphere, a toxic place to work," Sall said. "They're running it into the ground."

At their meeting, commissioners decided to invite the five companies that had interviewed for the contract back for another round, this time in front of the commission. The presentations are scheduled for Oct. 20, officials said.

"There's a lot of people complaining, and they're everyday people," Carney said. "Before I hand out a 10-year contract,

Publisher's Note

Is Amendment 3 the right tool to promote tax savings?

Readers of The Coastal Star have often commented to me that they appreciate our balanced news coverage. I pray you take this column as a discussion of the merits of a plan, not the politics behind it.

Five months ago our governor put forward a plan to rapidly raise the homestead exemption over the next few years, saving homesteaded taxpayers money and drastically cutting the tax revenue of every town, city and county in the state. It gained traction, and a variation of the governor's idea got onto the November ballot as Amendment 3, requiring 60% voter approval to pass.

In theory this rewards people who choose to call Florida their full-time home and shifts the tax burden onto tourists, renters and snowbirds. But the plan calls for the state to have more control over taxes, taking away control from locals. This could basically end home rule on tax rates as we know it.

Claims of tax abuse

The idea also claims to be a way to end local tax collection abuse. I was having a hard time finding a local example of overt tax abuse, until news broke in September that the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office has used more than $6 million in recent years to bring back 41 retired and loyal department heads at inflated "salaries" after they already had generous pensions in place. The sheriff now says he is ending the program in October. No wonder residents think there is tax waste.

For Amendment 3

The Florida Realtors political action committee has set aside $10 million to promote Amendment 3, with its president saying that Floridians need "meaningful relief" from the high cost of living. So far the Realtors is the only organization to put money into this campaign. It's hard to argue about the needs of each home-buying family, but what about the communities they live in?

Against Amendment 3

Palm Beach County Administrator Joe Abruzzo calls Amendment 3 "a blatant gut punch to local government."

Some municipalities wouldn't survive the loss of revenue and the county would have to take over running them and take on their debt, he says.

"Knowing the impact to first responders, the impact to county services and what it will mean to residents has kept me up at night," Abruzzo said.

Against the plan are most of the city and town managers in The Coastal Star communities, plus dozens of county and state agencies that serve health, educational and safety needs.

Eroding home rule

Our cities and towns are well run by professional staffers, and they are directed by our neighbors: the mayors, council members and commissioners whom we elected.

One way we enjoy local control of our taxes is in how much is spent on public safety.

I live in Ocean Ridge, and we choose to have more police per capita than in most other small towns. Shouldn't we be able to control what we spend on ourselves?

Amendment 3 would strip away too much local control of tax spending. Do we want to erode home rule, let the state set a standard on spending, and see what kind of public services we get? No thanks.

What to do?

It's hard to argue that saving Florida residents money on their tax bills is a bad idea. I would love to see our state, county and local governments find ways to spend less of our money on things we don't need.

Amendment 3 would reduce taxes for some, but it would create more chaos than many of Florida's towns, cities and counties could handle.

Vote no, and let's come back after the election and look for better ways to improve accountability.

Parents who lost daughter to cancer say she inspired them to help others

By Tao Woolfe

Boca Raton couple Michael and Camilla Goodwin's charity helps families battling childhood cancer. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

Myla Carrera Goodwin was an extraordinary child — one whose intelligence, energy and compassion burned so brightly it was as if she knew, even before her cancer diagnosis, that her time on Earth would be brief.

Her parents, Camilla and Michael Goodwin, describe her as a kind of miraculous unicorn who taught them how to live in the light even as the shadows deepened around them.

And now, six years after Myla's death at age 9, the Goodwins pay their little girl's magic forward by helping other families navigate the hell of childhood cancer.

The Goodwins own and operate Crazy Uncle Mike's, a popular live music, scratch kitchen gourmet food and dance venue at 6450 N. Federal Highway in Boca Raton. They founded Myla's BeLeaf in 2021 to honor their daughter.

The charitable foundation — which has raised more than $3.2 million since its first fundraising gala at Crazy Uncle Mike's in 2023 — provides grants up to $5,000 each to families struggling to pay basic bills after their children have been diagnosed with cancer.

More than 380 families have been helped by the foundation, Camilla Goodwin said.

Although the allotments are small, they can be a huge help to families struggling with rent or mortgage payments, utilities, transportation to hospital and treatment centers, car payments, fuel costs and groceries.

"We work to ease the financial and emotional burdens families face so they can focus on care, connection and healing," Camilla Goodwin said. "Our vision is a world without childhood cancer. Until that time, we envision a world where families facing childhood cancer feel supported, understood, and surrounded by care."

When Myla was 6, she was diagnosed with Wilms tumor, a rare kidney cancer that mainly affects young children. The cancer had already spread to her lungs.

"Our world stopped," Camilla Goodwin said. "Nothing prepares you for those words."

But the world did not stop for Myla, who faced her diagnosis with courage and hope. She held onto that poise through surgery, chemotherapy, radiation, and alternative therapy in Austria, her mother said.

A photo of Myla from that time shows her smiling and resolute, a rainbow unicorn hat perched on a head stripped of hair by chemotherapy. Her eyes are bright, her skin luminescent.

"She endured more than any child ever should, yet she continued to show us strength, grace and joy," Camilla Goodwin has said. "Even in the hardest moments, her spirit remained intact."

But after all the treatments, doctors determined that Myla had, by then, developed multiple lesions on her lungs and that the cancer had spread to her brain. Make her comfortable, the doctors said. She died Jan. 1, 2020.

Camilla Goodwin, 49, born and raised in Sweden, is a real estate agent who speaks multiple languages and holds degrees in psychology and business leadership. Michael Goodwin, 63, a native of New Mexico, has owned many bars and clubs. He loves music, entertainment and good food. He has had extensive executive experience in the hotel industry in the U.S. and internationally.

The couple met at a club Michael owned in Las Vegas. The Goodwins, who live in Boca Raton, have two other adult daughters.

Michael Goodwin said he is not as involved with the charity's day-to-day operations as his wife, but enjoys turning Crazy Uncle Mike's into a big, bold venue for Myla's BeLeaf fundraising events.

And those annual events are extremely successful, he said. In August, the club hosted "Boca's Got Talent," a Boca Raton Regional Chamber of Commerce event designed to raise awareness and support for local families coping with childhood cancer.

The gala raised about $650,000 for Myla's BeLeaf, thanks to many small donations and some very generous ones, Michael Goodwin said.

After Myla's death, the Goodwins worked to establish relationships with hospitals and care centers to help identify needs and needy families, and to set up the charitable foundation, but it happened quickly and things fell seamlessly into place, he said.

"Myla's magic was behind it," Michael Goodwin said. "She was extraordinary. Hers was an energy of love, not loss."

In the days and weeks following their daughter's death, the couple repeatedly found leaves in improbable places. They came to believe that Myla had sent — and continues to send — foliage to comfort them.

"A leaf represents hope, renewal and growth, and those values reflect everything Myla stood for," Camilla Goodwin said, explaining how Myla's BeLeaf became the name of the charity. "Her spirit lives on through this foundation and through the lives it touches."

To donate to Myla's BeLeaf, visit mylasbeleaf.com.

Several charitable events throughout the year benefit the foundation.

The next event will be a Ladies' Tea at the Delray Beach Club from 2 to 4 p.m. Oct. 17. Tickets are $150.

Now there are those who fear a proposed constitutional amendment on the November ballot would be another blow to municipal governments and an increased power shift away from local self-governance should voters approve it.

What is known as Amendment 3 would raise the exemption on homesteaded properties from $51,411 this year to $150,000 in 2027 and to $250,000 the following year if it receives at least 60% voter approval.

Ongoing coverage of pros and cons of Amendment 3 on the November ballot

Who controls the money?

Those familiar with the workings of government say that if the amendment passes, local governments will have less money to spend and will most likely be more dependent on the state, and in some cases the county, to cover the cost of services to residents.

"It's the power of the purse," says Charles Chapman, a legislative advocate for the Florida League of Cities. "The power shift is wholly centered on who controls the money."

If local governments don't have money to do what needs to be done, he says, they could be forced to go to the state for help. Those who are elected by the residents of their community will in many cases no longer always be the final decision makers on what funds get spent where.

"All of a sudden it goes from a relationship-driven process to a decision being made by someone far away who has never been to that community," Chapman says. "We're seeing the local government's authority being undermined because of finances."

Soaring property values

Supporters of the amendment, including the president of the Florida Realtors, say the amendment is about affordability at a time when many residents are struggling to make ends meet — and the higher exemptions will keep more money in people's pockets.

"We just totally focused on affordability," says Broward County Realtor Chuck Bonfiglio, who leads the organization. "We want to make sure everyone has the opportunity to buy a home."

Supporters of Amendment 3 — including the Florida Realtors, which has committed $10 million toward promoting the proposal to voters — have pointed out that local governments have received more revenue as property values increase. They say spending should be reined in.

Titcomb from South Palm Beach, who is also a former executive director of the Palm Beach County League of Cities, counters that actions of municipal leaders are often closely watched by residents.

"At the local level, we're under more scrutiny than any other level of government," he says.

State leaders over the years have defended legislation that gives the state more say in local decisions as being important for consistency instead of having a patchwork of rules and regulations throughout the state.

Bonfiglio believes the local governments and those in Tallahassee can work together to find workable solutions to financial issues that arise while managing taxpayer dollars wisely.

"I think there's tremendous opportunity for collaboration between state and local governments," he says.

A domino effect

The shift in decision making could filter down to the county level. Palm Beach County Administrator Joe Abruzzo thinks that a handful of municipalities could end up dissolving because the amount of revenue coming in wouldn't be enough to keep the town running.

"There are municipalities in the county that will no longer be sustainable," he says.

Should a municipality fold, the responsibility for providing services to those residents would rest in the hands of the County Commission.

Along with having to provide services, the county would also be responsible for paying off the debt of those cities and towns at a time when the county itself could be faced with a shortfall of about $330 million.

Just dealing with the loss of $230 million in general fund revenue and the loss of $100 million in money to cover the fire rescue operation is enough to cause Abruzzo to lose sleep.

"Knowing the impact to first responders, the impact to county services and what it will mean to residents has kept me up at night," he says.

A growing separation

For residents of a community forced to dissolve should the amendment pass, there would likely be more distance — both physically and relationship wise — between them and decision makers.

Now residents might have a chance to voice their concerns to an elected official whom they see at church or synagogue or who might live down the street. But that might be more of a challenge if the County Commission is making the decisions — let alone the state.

Abruzzo says county commissioners will continue to listen to residents, including those who come from former municipalities.

"Our board would do a great job," he says.

Abruzzo, a Democrat who served in the Florida House of Representatives and the Florida Senate, says he believes the relationship between the state and local governments is a distant one.

"Amendment 3 is a blatant gut punch to local government," he says.

Enter the state

Abruzzo and others say they are hearing rumblings that one of the future goals of state leaders would be to do away with property taxes and raise the sales tax.

"They would raise sales taxes to new heights," he says. "It could be the highest rate in the nation."

The idea of a sales tax increase and the potential for the state distributing it to local governments to offset the lack of property tax revenue is concerning to Bill Thrasher, Briny Breezes' manager who previously was manager of Gulf Stream and interim manager of Highland Beach.

"State-controlled sales tax collection and distribution will significantly reduce local control, the local voice, and convenience of attending public budget hearings where spending decisions are made," Thrasher says. "Verifiably, local government is better governance of the public dollar."

Putting the power to make local spending decisions in the hands of the state Legislature, Thrasher says, is problematic.

"How many state legislators have even heard of the Town of Briny Breezes?" he asks. "How could they even begin to understand the town's current situation and the various critical issues facing Briny taxpayers?"

Money concerns

Chapman from the League of Cities uses an example of a city with a public library no longer having the money to run a special program.

The city can go to the state and ask for money through a grant program or ask for money through an appropriation that usually is sponsored by a legislator but must be approved by the Legislature and signed off by the governor.

"Lord help us if the Legislature has a different political philosophy than the program the library is providing," he says.

Chapman gives another example of a group of residents going to their city commission asking to make improvements on a local road that residents say needs to be repaired.

If there's not enough money in the budget because there's less property tax revenue, the city could go to the county, but that might be a long shot because the road is not a county-maintained road.

If the county can't help, the city could go to the state, but the state doesn't have a process to fix a residential road, Chapman says. The city could then have to decide if the road improvement is more of a priority than building a playground or adding another paramedic.

For Abruzzo, the solutions will not come easy and they most likely won't be popular.

He says he sees the look on the faces of residents when he talks about having to make cuts that will have a long-term impact.

"I do dread our residents' demands and expressions when they realize the impact that Amendment 3 will have on our county if it passes," he says. "It will not look and feel the same as it does today."

Bonfiglio from the Realtors association believes that Amendment 3 has sparked necessary conversations that show a common denominator.

"We all want the same thing," he says. "We want our communities to thrive. It's just a matter of how we get there." ★

Corrections

A September story about Boca Raton's new police chief misspelled his first name. The chief's name is Jarad L. Phelps.

A September story about a hearing regarding the Boynton Inlet sand transfer station incorrectly reported the reason for the hearing's postponement. It was postponed to give the parties more time to prepare for the hearing. In addition, while the administrative law judge determined Ocean Ridge had "substantial interests" in the outcome of the dispute with the town of Manalapan, she rejected Ocean Ridge's request to intervene, saying the county was already representing the town's interests.

South Palm Beach News

Town property taxes go down again — The South Palm Beach Town Council in September approved keeping the town's tax rate at $3.30 for every $1,000 of taxable value. However, unlike in other nearby towns that have held the line on their tax rates, South Palm Beach's move means the average property owners will see their town taxes go down.

That's because the town's overall property values have declined for the second year in a row. The approved rate also marks the second consecutive year the town rate is below the "no new taxes" rollback rate, which was set at $3.4156 per $1,000 for the new fiscal year that started Oct. 1.

While the town's taxes may be decreasing, Town Manager Jamie Titcomb explained to the council that many if not most residents will nonetheless see an increase in their total property tax bills because of assessments charged by the county, school district and other taxing agencies.

Town applies for grant — Titcomb informed the Town Council that the town had submitted a grant application with the Florida Department of Environmental Protection requesting $2.5 million toward its ongoing construction of a new wastewater lift station.

The grant would be expected to cover as much as 50% of the expected cost of $5 million.

Titcomb also said efforts are ongoing through the town's lobbying firm in Washington to obtain federal funds for the same project. He said those efforts won't occur until next summer, but "if both funding sources were to come through, there is a likelihood that the town's majority investment in the lift station could be paid for by state and federal dollars."

Town vehicle donated — The council voted 4-0, with Council member Sandy Beckett absent due to illness, to donate a 2015 Ford Explorer to the town's Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office substation for whatever purpose that office chooses.

The Explorer was previously used in various capacities by town employees, but that use was discontinued several years ago and the council has on multiple occasions debated the correct next step. Titcomb, who proposed the donation, said the move "could be a back channel asset to us in the long run."

You can crunch the numbers. You can rearrange the numbers. But you can't escape the numbers.

The Delray Beach City Commission went round and round during two lengthy — and sometimes loud — discussions of property tax rates and budget figures during its September meetings. The battle featured shouting matches, a momentary flirtation with the rollback rate and a suspenseful final vote.

When the dust settled, a supermajority of the commission came to the same bottom line: A tax rate increase was needed.

The commission on Sept. 22 voted 4-1 to approve a rate of $6.3501 per $1,000 of taxable value and a general fund operating budget of about $215 million for the fiscal year that started Oct. 1. That rate is an increase of just more than 3% over the previous tax rate. The city has now raised the tax rate for the second straight year after a dozen years of lowering the rate, culminating in 2024, when the commission approved a "no new taxes" rollback rate.

While the new tax rate is lower than the rate originally proposed to residents in August, it's still not as low as Mayor Tom Carney would have liked.

Carney, the lone dissenting vote, said most residents he talked to had hoped the city's tax rate would remain at least the same as the current year, $6.1611 per $1,000 of taxable value, if not lower.

"I've talked to a lot of people the last few weeks, I know what they're looking for," Carney said on Sept. 8, though only about 10 residents spoke during two public hearings. "They're looking for us to tighten our belt."

Rising operating costs, inflation and years of reduced tax rates contributed to the need for a tax increase, city officials said.

But the mayor argued that the city has enjoyed tremendous gains in property values — a 57% increase in its tax base over the past five years, he said — and dozens of new properties will go on the tax roll in 2027. Delray Beach property values rose 7.5% in 2026, according to the Palm Beach County property appraiser.

The commission's decision essentially came down to a choice between maintaining the current tax rate of $6.1611 and a reserve fund balance equal to 18.9% of the city's general fund budget, or the city manager's proposed rate of $6.3501 that would have reserves equaling 20.27% of the budget.

The suspense at the Sept. 22 meeting grew because any amount above the rollback rate of $5.855 per $1,000 required approval by at least four of the five commissioners to pass. Carney seemed to have support from Vice Mayor Angela Burns, who said she wanted the lowest possible tax rate that would allow the city to still provide all services, but Commissioner Judy Mollica — and another commissioner — would also need to switch their stands to get the four votes needed for passage of the lower rate.

Mollica said she was undecided just before the final vote, leaving the possibility that neither rate could get the needed four votes.

If the commission had failed to pass a property tax rate, the rate would have reverted to the rollback rate, an outcome City Manager Terrence Moore said would be terrible for the city: "No can do," he said.

Commissioner Juli Casale made a motion to assess the higher rate, which was seconded by Commissioner Tom Markert. Then came the roll call. Just a few minutes after she said she was undecided, Mollica was the first to be called to vote. She supported the motion.

When Burns' turn came, she also voted for the higher rate, much to Carney's surprise. Burns indicated she did not want to let "the process" of establishing tax rates dictate how the commission voted.

The vote followed an evening of bickering, led by Carney and Casale trading insults. Even the city's chief financial officer, Henry Dachowitz, reached his boiling point when Carney interrupted him during a budget explanation.

"If you're not going to let me answer, why should I sit here?" Dachowitz said to Carney. "I have 50 years' experience. This is ridiculous. I've forgotten more than the expertise on this commission."

Casale pressed Carney at each meeting for specific ideas about additional budget cuts, but he didn't offer any, instead deferring to Moore.

"My plan is that the city manager will figure (it) out," Carney said. "If we have to address numbers of personnel, then we have to address that. Every other city is doing it."

But Casale said Delray Beach's actions are in line with those of surrounding communities. She also emphasized the need for the city to maintain its operating reserves at 21% to 25% of total operating expenditures.

"We're modifying our reserves to make the budget work," Casale said. "That is not a good day-to-day practice and it's not fiscally sound for our long-term financial future."

Finance officials typically advise that reserves be used to cover one-time expenses. Using reserves to lower the tax rate to cover continuing expenditures makes it that much harder to balance the following year's budget without raising taxes or dipping deeper into the reserves.

Markert shared Casale's concerns about drawing down the reserve fund or lowering the tax rate any further, saying additional budget cuts would be "painful."

"We have cut out all the fat and we're now sawing through the proverbial bone," he said.

The city's proposed tax rate in preliminary property tax bills that went out in August was $6.4371 per $1,000 of taxable value. A commission workshop discussion on Sept. 1 resulted in trimming the rate to $6.3501.

The commission also approved a separate tax rate for voted debt. City property owners will pay $0.0289 per $1,000 to cover the debt payments, bringing the city's combined tax rate to $6.3790 for every $1,000 of taxable value.

A Delray Beach resident with a home with a taxable value of $481,794 — the average valuation in the county — would pay $3,073 in property taxes, according to Dachowitz.

The city's total budget — including general, special revenue, enterprise, debt service, capital and internal service funds — is about $716 million. The two largest expenditures are for police and fire rescue services. The police budget is $58.5 million, a 3.2% increase, while the fire budget went up 12.9% to about $56.5 million, largely due to salaries and benefits, officials said. ★

Drivers face increases in parking fines, school zone enforcement

By Larry Barszewski

Drivers in Delray Beach had better watch their speed and where they park in the city — because parking fines increased dramatically as of Oct. 1 and cameras are now being used for speed-zone enforcement around schools.

The city agreed to increase parking fines — it is particularly concerned about cars blocking sidewalks — after the U.S. Department of Transportation sent a notice that an Americans with Disabilities Act complaint had been filed over sidewalk access. The notice required the city to take steps to address the issue.

City Manager Terrence Moore approved a staff plan that increased the fine for blocking a sidewalk to $250 per violation — the same fine charged for parking illegally in a handicapped parking space — more than seven times higher than the previous $35 fine.

"When somebody's blocking the sidewalk, you're making somebody in a wheelchair, a mother with a stroller, a child have to walk into the street into oncoming traffic to circumvent the vehicle. So, while I understand the fine is hefty, there's a reason for that, and it's to ensure compliance," City Attorney Lynn Gelin told commissioners at their Sept. 22 meeting.

"The thinking was really just to make it consistent with the wheelchair parking violation because that, too, has ADA implications as well," she said.

Many other parking fines have also been raised from $35 to $250, including for parking on a crosswalk, median or paved right-of-way, for parking that blocks a driveway, faces the wrong way, or that's within a prohibited or tow zone, and for double parking.

4,945 speeding violations

As for speeding in school zones, Delray Beach is one of many cities that have begun using cameras to catch and fine violators. Boynton Beach and Boca Raton are also using such cameras, officials said.

And boy, are they working.

In a little over a month, from Aug. 10 to Sept. 18, Delray Beach issued 4,945 speeding violations caught on school zone cameras, according to a report presented to commissioners at the same meeting. Each violation results in a $100 fine for the vehicle's owner.

The most violations — 2,407 — took place around Pine Grove Elementary School, and the second-most around St. Vincent Ferrer Catholic School, where 1,397 notices of violations were produced, the report said. The two schools accounted for 77% of all notices issued during that period.

The cameras are working throughout the school day — not just before and after school when flashing lights warn of a reduced speed limit. The fines are being charged to anyone going 11 miles per hour or more over the posted speed limit — including the in-between hours while school is in session but when no lights are flashing and the regular speed limit is in force. ★

Town Hall and fire station may get separate homes

Eau owner begins lease on town space in Plaza del Mar

By Emily Rose Finn

Palm Beach County Fire Rescue does not want to be part of Manalapan's planned new Town Hall. It wants to stay at the site of the current Town Hall instead — and it would pay to build a new facility there, Town Manager Eric Marmer told commissioners Sept. 8.

The town is planning to replace its Town Hall with a new one to be built on the former bank property it acquired at Plaza del Mar, 131 S. Ocean Blvd. The new budget includes $175,000 to design the building.

The town took that property through eminent domain. In June, a circuit judge approved the taking and the town deposited $2.85 million in the court registry. A jury could still set a different final price.

Meanwhile, until a new Town Hall is under construction, the town has agreed to let its Plaza del Mar property serve as a base for renovation work across State Road A1A at the Eau Resort & Spa. Commissioners on Sept. 8 approved a lease with MPB Property LLC, the resort's owner, for the former bank building, providing the town income in the interim before the town's construction starts.

The $4,600-a-month lease, effective Sept. 11, runs for one year and then can be extended from month to month, with the Eau renting the building in its existing condition.

Commissioners also approved allowing materials storage next to the building, behind an 8-foot chain-link fence with windscreen and a rolling gate that will enclose the storage area for use by the resort's contractor.

At the resort itself, commissioners approved new black aluminum railings and teak-look cladding for the Eau's guestroom balconies. "It's basically a modification of the railings that are outside of the hotel," said Tim Nardi, the Eau's general manager. The new railings drop the current palm tree design.

"We're very excited about the renovation that's about to start at the hotel," Nardi said. ★

Town's tax rate isn't changing, but taxes will be higher

By Steve Plunkett

Gulf Stream's property tax bills for fiscal 2027 will have an increasingly familiar rate: $3.67 per $1,000 of taxable value, the same number it has been since 2021.

Town commissioners approved the tax rate in a final budget hearing on Sept. 23.

"There is no difference in this budget and the one that was tentatively approved during our budget hearing on Sept. 11," Town Manager Trey Nazzaro said.

The approved tax rate will generate $7.53 million, up about $534,000 from this past year, Nazzaro said. Property values in town rose 7.9% to $2.05 billion.

More than 50% of the tax revenue goes to operation of police, fire and emergency medical services, Nazzaro said.

Under the new tax rate, the owner of a $1 million house will pay $3,672 in town property taxes in addition to county, school and other levies.

The new rate is 7.3% over the rollback rate, which would have raised $6.99 million, the same amount of property taxes as the previous year except for new construction.

The total 2026-27 budget is $12.4 million, which includes a $7 million general fund, $2.49 million water fund, $50,666 debt service fund and $2.87 million capital projects fund.

Work on the roads and drainage in the town's Core area is wrapping up, and the capital projects money will go toward engineering and construction in the Place Au Soleil district. That work will include resurfacing of roadways, swale grading and reconstruction of roadways in spots.

Nazzaro will take $883,295 from the water enterprise fund to pay for a planned connection with Boynton Beach's water plant, which he said will take place in spring 2027. Delray Beach will no longer be the town's water supplier.

Gulf Stream now has $6.7 million in undesignated reserve funds, he said. ★

Ex-Dolphin reaches deal on reckless driving charge

By Jane Musgrave

Former Miami Dolphins fullback Rob Konrad in September ended his short-lived journey through the criminal justice system on a charge of reckless driving by taking an eight-hour defensive driving course.

At a hearing on Sept. 17, his attorney Greg Rosenfeld told Palm Beach County Judge Ashley Zuckerman that the 49-year-old Ocean Ridge resident had satisfied the terms of the nonprosecution agreement he inked with state prosecutors.

Since Konrad completed the course and paid $100 for court costs, prosecutors dropped the reckless driving charge he faced in connection with a June 29 crash in Gulf Stream. As part of the plea deal, prosecutors also dismissed three traffic citations Konrad faced after police said he lost control of his Land Rover SUV while driving an estimated 80 mph on State Road A1A near the Ballantrae condominiums.

The vehicle crashed into several trees, a streetlight and a water valve before flipping over. Konrad was airlifted to the hospital.

Konrad, who works as a financial adviser and in March paid $4.7 million for a 5,800-square-foot house on Harbour Drive South, played fullback for the Dolphins from 1999 to 2004. ★

Gulf Stream News

Better curve, new curbs — The town will redo the sharp curve where Sea Road meets Gulfstream Road in front of Town Hall.

Jackson Land Development will charge $57,758 to widen the asphalt there to 26 feet. The town rejected options to widen the curve to 30 feet or widen Sea Road by 4 feet to become 20 feet wide, saying both ideas made the road wider than was needed.

The 26-foot expansion was proposed by Police Chief Richard Jones and Public Works Director Robert Paulin as a way, along with new F curbs, to prevent the rutting that was prevalent before in front of the police station.

"I think they did a great job. It was well thought out," Town Commissioner Joan Orthwein said.

Commissioners approved the expense at their Sept. 11 meeting. In August they had complained that the narrow curve made drivers slow down or stop to maneuver through it.

Party to welcome residents back — The Gulf Stream Civic Association and the town will split a $12,000 bill to throw a welcome-back party for seasonal residents at The Little Club.

The association approached Town Manager Trey Nazzaro with the idea, modeled after their centennial celebration party last year, and he set aside $6,000 for it in the fiscal 2027 budget.

The party is planned for Nov. 4.

"There's been a lot of buzz about this," Mayor Scott Morgan said. "I think it's a great idea and the cost is de minimis frankly for the benefit it confers on the town."

Residents recognized for lasting through Delray meeting — Three Place Au Soleil homeowners were praised at the Sept. 11 Town Commission meeting "for their civic participation, commitment to public engagement, and willingness to address the Delray Beach City Commission" as it reconsidered allowing new townhomes next door.

Residents Sam Pearlman, David Toal and Ann Bennett were the recipients of Gulf Stream's appreciation and gratitude in a resolution "recognizing their patience and civic commitment in participating in a meeting that extended until approximately 10 p.m."

The Delray Beach project, which was approved Aug. 18, involves 39 two-story structures and eight that will rise three stories. The property, which is on North Federal Highway adjacent to Place Au Soleil, sits just north of a golf cart business on the east side of the highway.

Town ends up paying to settle code enforcement case

By Larry Barszewski

Ocean Ridge town commissioners have given up their battle against the former owner of a dilapidated Coconut Lane home who racked up code enforcement fines topping $100,000.

Instead of approving a settlement in December 2024 that extracted at least some payment for the fines that began accruing two years earlier, as the town's legal counsel had advised, commissioners continued their fight for more than a year and a half longer.

That fight came to an end on Sept. 14, when commissioners not only voted to make the case go away, but agreed that the town would be the one doing the paying. The commission took that action because there was a chance the town might have to pay even more if commissioners didn't settle.

James Cooksey's former property — now on the market and fixed up by a new owner with an asking price of almost $7 million — had been an eyesore at the end of Coconut Lane for several years. Cooksey, who has invested in real estate, purchased it in 2005.

In 2023, after a lien was placed on the 23 Coconut Lane property, Cooksey sued the town, saying he had not been properly noticed of the fines or the November 2022 hearing before a special magistrate where the $150-a-day fine was imposed. A judge dismissed the case, but Cooksey appealed.

It was before the appeal was decided that commissioners had an opportunity to settle the case if they would let Cooksey pay only $30,000 of the $117,000 in fines attached to the property near the end of 2024. They turned it down.

At the time, Cooksey told the commissioners he had a good case: "We can litigate the thing for two more years, I don't care if that's what you guys want to do. Pay people $500 an hour rather than resolving it."

And things started to go Cooksey's way. The appeal court reversed the dismissal and allowed Cooksey to file a new complaint. Cooksey actually paid off about $125,000 in fines and other fees to clear the title and sold the property for $2 million while still challenging the fines in court.

In September, the commission voted to pay Cooksey $172,500, or $47,500 more than Cooksey had paid to clear the property's title. The settlement was approved without discussion as part of a larger consent agenda.

Part of the reason commissioners agreed to settle was that the judge in the case had ordered arbitration, and the arbitrator was recommending the town pay more than $207,000 to Cooksey, according to a staff report.

While the commission voted to settle the case, Vice Mayor Steve Coz wasn't convinced Cooksey hadn't seen the notices, which he said included a red notice of violation posted on the house by police.

"He claimed he didn't see it," Coz said after the commission's Sept. 14 meeting. "You have to get a picture of him being handed the notice."

Cooksey did not respond to an email and a phone call from The Coastal Star seeking comments about the settlement.★

Ocean Ridge News

Taxes up; no change in rate — The Ocean Ridge Town Commission voted to hold the town's tax rate at $5.40 for every $1,000 of taxable value, which is expected to produce an extra $1 million in tax revenue this year because of rising property values.

The approved rate results in a 6.13% tax increase over the no-new-taxes rollback rate. This is the fourth year in a row the commission has kept the rate at $5.40 per $1,000.

The commission at its Sept. 21 meeting also approved an $11.395 million general fund budget and $6.5 million in unassigned reserves for emergency situations. Those reserves, which equate to 60.5% of the general fund budget that is used to pay for day-to-day town operations, would be able to cover about seven months of regular town expenses if needed.

The town's overall $20.7 million budget also includes $4.035 million for capital projects, including water main modernization, storm water improvements and sea wall protection.

The owner of home with a $1 million taxable value will pay $5,400 in town taxes.

Fees to park at county beaches end before they even begin

By Jane Musgrave

Palm Beach County has scrapped a plan that would have forced county residents to get annual passes to continue to park for free at 12 county beachfront parks beginning Oct. 1. At the same time, officials nixed a plan to slap out-of-county residents with $4-an-hour parking fees.

The turnaround came after parks officials discovered that the proposed fees would violate state and federal grants that were used for improvements at eight of the parks. According to the grant terms, all beachgoers have to be treated equally.

A County Commission plan to charge only out-of-county residents ran afoul of the conditions that prohibit discrimination, said Jennifer Cirillo, director of the county Department of Parks and Recreation. The county couldn't make nonresidents pay while letting residents park for free.

Initially, Cirillo suggested charging everyone — both residents and nonresidents — to park at the 12 seaside parks, including Gulfstream Park in the County Pocket next to Gulf Stream, Ocean Ridge Hammock Park in Ocean Ridge, and Ocean Inlet Park in Boynton Beach. The fee would have generated an estimated $10 million annually.

While Commissioner Maria Marino championed the fee, she reversed course in July after receiving more than 2,000 emails from angry residents. Instead, she suggested just charging out-of-county residents, which would have put $3 million in county coffers.

The other commissioners followed her lead because seven of the 12 parks that would be affected are in her north county district.

While county residents won't have to get parking passes and out-of-towners won't have to pay at the 12 parks, not all county beachfront parks are free.

For years, the county has collected parking fees at South Inlet Park in Boca Raton and R.G. Kreusler Park, which is adjacent to Lake Worth Beach Park.

Boca Raton and Lake Worth Beach officials demanded it. They worried that revenues at their parks would plummet if beachgoers could park at the nearby county parks for free. ★

Head of historical society leaving job

By Holly Baltz

Winnie Diggans Edwards, who came back to her hometown to take care of a sick parent and ended up leading the history organization her father helped found, is leaving after 13 years as executive director of the Delray Beach Historical Society. Her last day is Oct. 30.

Edwards

Past historical society President John Miller Jr. takes the reins as interim director at the end of October. His family has been in Delray Beach since 1903.

Edwards, who left Florida to attend college in Texas then worked in creative marketing for 22 years in places across the country, moved back when her mother, Betty Jane Diggans, became ill. Diggans died at age 97 in December.

Edwards isn't certain what's next.

"It's time for a new chapter," Edwards said in a Sept. 22 phone interview. "I feel so good and so positive about what I've contributed to my community and to my father's legacy."

The Diggans family has been central to the Delray Beach fabric for generations. Her father, Roy, was the society's first vice president when it began in 1964.

"It is the memories and experiences of these past 13 years that I will value the most," Edwards said in a letter to society members. "I will remember the countless stories shared with me, the friendships and relationships that developed along the way."

When a nonprofit director is asked to name a top accomplishment, one might expect to hear about fund-raising or acquisitions.

Edwards has a different answer: "Creating culture inclusivity, really focusing on everyone knowing they are welcome here," she said.

"Sometimes 'society' denotes something. … We've worked very hard to make that happen." Edwards said. "That's why we've grown so much over the past 10 years."

She has worked to push creativity and education to a wider audience and beyond history and preservation to conservation.

New partners included the Spady Cultural Heritage Museum, the Surfrider Foundation and the Sandoway Discovery Center.

Her achievement list isn't short:

• 29 large history exhibits, including "Fish Tales: An Exploration of the Area's Fishing History," one of the most popular that took up all three cottages on the organization's campus at Northeast First Street and Swinton Avenue;

• Expansion of educational programs, history happy hours, walking tours and a weeklong summer camp for kids on the art of letter writing;

• Some of the group's most popular events, such as the Fall Festival and Twilight in the Garden;

• An acre heritage garden on the society's campus, turning green space into an educational garden with 100% native plants and 400 species in seven habitats.

Some other big moments of pride came when times were toughest, Edwards said, during the COVID-19 pandemic.

"We took an interesting approach. We talked our board into giving back," she said.

At a time when nonprofits struggled, the historical society bought thousands of dollars' worth of gift cards from restaurants, many of which suffered gravely during the pandemic. It also sent hundreds of burlap bag camp kits home for kids.

And it broke a world record during that time.

The organization built the longest linear outdoor history exhibit in the world with 1,000 images from its archives. It created captions, laminated them and strung them on wooden posts around the entire campus — outdoors so it was safe for folks to get out of their homes and see others. About 4,000 came, Edwards said.

"It was really fun, and people really appreciated it," she added. "I still to this day tear up when I think about it."

The Diggans family has lived in Delray Beach for generations. Edwards' great-grandfather, Charles Harvey Diggans, traveled to Delray in 1920 from Wilmington, Delaware. He ran a real estate business and sundry shop on Atlantic Avenue.

Edwards' grandfather, Leroy, became the first president of the Delray Chamber of Commerce in 1925. Leroy and Edwards' father, Roy, both were U.S. postmasters in the city.

This year, Edwards got a surprise from her dad while she was sitting onstage on July 4 waiting for a time capsule to be unearthed. Unbeknownst to her, Roy had contributed a letter for the capsule, which was buried during the bicentennial celebration in 1976. He died in 2001.

After leaving a mark on Delray Beach, just like her family, Edwards plans pursuits that are simpler than running a bustling nonprofit: More time outdoors, hiking and riding bikes; travel; reading, and cooking for friends.

"I feel like I had a 13-year opportunity of a lifetime," she said. "I gave it my all."

Members are invited to a farewell for Edwards at the nonprofit's annual meeting at 6 p.m. Oct. 8. ★

Delray Beach News

Independent consultant to review cemetery — Delray Beach has hired a consulting firm to address long-standing complaints about plots and maintenance at Delray Beach Memorial Gardens Municipal Cemetery.

The comprehensive review by Kuehne Cemetery Consulting, of Casselberry, was scheduled to start in September and last six weeks at a cost of $15,000, according to the city manager's office.

Meanwhile, City Manager Terrence Moore reported at a recent City Commission meeting that re-engineering and land reconfiguration have resulted in the availability of 100 new plots at the cemetery, which had reached full capacity.

The cemetery, at 901 SW 10th St., has been a source of complaints from residents about lack of space, misidentified plots and poor groundskeeping.

Kuehne will review maintenance standards, customer service, communication practices and finances, among other items, and then issue a report of its findings and recommendations. The city was scheduled to hold a Sept. 30 community input meeting for residents.

Money given to anti-drug programs — The Delray Beach City Commission awarded funds for anti-drug programs to two organizations at its Sept. 22 meeting: nonprofit group Living Skills in the Schools, of Delray Beach, for substance abuse prevention training and education; and Junior Achievement of Broward County. Both groups will receive $50,000 per year for three years for a total of $150,000 each.

The reimbursable grants will be funded through Caron Foundation Settlement funds. Delray Beach has a total of $947,566 in Caron funds and the city initially is considering allocations for half of that total, or $473,783.

At its Sept. 8 meeting, the City Commission also discussed using separate opioid litigation settlement funds to hire a community paramedic and a clinical social worker as part of a mobile integrated health unit for the Fire Rescue Department. But commissioners were concerned about being able to fund these positions beyond one year, so they advised city staff to come back later with a potential one-year contractual agreement for the personnel.

South Palm Beach/Lantana

Solution could be at hand for dock permitting controversy

By Brian Biggane

What began as a relatively confrontational meeting between officials from Lantana and South Palm Beach ended with the two sides agreeing to work toward a resolution of a territorial dispute that has been brewing for years.

The disagreement concerns who controls dock permitting in the narrow Intracoastal Waterway channel between Lantana's Hypoluxo Island and the western shore of South Palm Beach.

Lantana claims it has jurisdiction over the waters between the two towns, thus giving it say over all permitting of docks and other structures constructed in those waters — including those for properties in South Palm Beach. However, South Palm Beach, which was incorporated in 1955, insists it established domain over the waters along its shores in 1959.

Lantana Town Attorney Max Lohman expressed confidence in Lantana's position at an Aug. 17 Lantana Town Council meeting, going so far as to state he was "dumbfounded" by the stance South Palm Beach was taking and vowing to take the town to court and even file suit if necessary. South Palm Beach officials were equally adamant, with attorney Lyman Reynolds saying early during the Sept. 18 joint meeting at Lantana Town Hall that the differences were so great that the town was ready to hire a mediator.

The latest installment of the ongoing disagreement began in September 2025 when Lantana first approved a permit request from the Concordia condominiums at 3555 and 3560 S. Ocean Blvd. in South Palm Beach to build a dock, then withdrew the authorization two months later. After South Palm Beach passed an ordinance Aug. 11 saying it controlled dock permitting for its residents, Lantana voted to challenge its neighbor's action, setting up a legal challenge that required the joint negotiating meeting.

Reynolds' proposal to go to mediation appeared to catch Lantana Town Manager Brian Raducci and Lohman by surprise, with Lohman pointing out the rules of the meeting mandated each side present its case and see if an interlocal agreement could be reached before mediation was needed.

And after more than an hour of back and forth between the two towns, an agreement appeared possible.

Raducci was particularly intent on reaching a quick resolution, repeatedly asking, "So what is it that you want?"

Lohman remained adamant throughout that South Palm Beach would have to align its regulations with those of Lantana before a compromise could be reached. South Palm Beach Mayor Rafael Pineiro, meanwhile, went through the history of his town's efforts going back to 1959 to establish its domain over permitting on docks along the waterway.

"That disagreement hasn't gone away," Pineiro said after the meeting. "Our founding documents take us to the middle of the lake, and in 1959 they (Lantana officials) reaffirmed their boundaries come to our shore, so there's an overlap. So the interlocal agreement would allow us to do permits but that doesn't mean we are relinquishing our claim. That's a fight for another day."

South Palm Beach Town Manager Jamie Titcomb said he felt the meeting amounted to "a win for both sides."

Lohman, meanwhile, sounded pragmatic, saying, "We are going to be neighbors for years, right? We have a lot of issues to work through; this is just one of them. It behooves us to have a good working relationship with all of you."

At the conclusion of the meeting, Raducci made an offer for Lantana to work up an agreement and send it to South Palm Beach for consideration. "At least we'll start with that," he said.

Just what that agreement will stipulate regarding issuing permits remains to be seen. What both sides agreed on is that regulations regarding docks in the two towns and the waterway in between them need to be uniform.

"It's going to be something you can work with, obviously," Raducci said. "Because you're not going to sign it if it's not." ★

Briny Breezes News

Town's tax rate jumps dramatically — The Briny Breezes Town Council unanimously agreed to nearly double the tax rate for the new fiscal year, approving a rate of $6.75 per $1,000 of taxable property value, up from the $3.75 per $1,000 residents paid in the previous year.

Under the new rate, for the fiscal year that started Oct. 1, the owner of a mobile home with a taxable value of $150,000 would pay $1,012.50 in town property taxes, a $450 increase.

The new rate was recommended by Town Manager Bill Thrasher, who said it is necessary as the town is seeking a $2.5 million loan from the state of Florida for capital improvement projects. The projects include drainage improvements and enhancing the town's entire sea wall.

Given the town's current property valuations, the $3 increase will raise about $300,000 to cover debt service payments.

Thrasher made the same tax rate proposal last year, but he pulled back and recommended keeping the rate at $3.75 per $1,000 when he realized the town couldn't get a loan in time.

The town's tax rate had been at the state-maximum $10 per $1,000 up until 2023, when it was reduced dramatically with some police costs shifted to the town's corporation, Briny Breezes Inc., which then charged property owners an assessment. That was done to give room to raise the tax rate in the future for money the town would need to make debt payments on the anticipated loans.

Trimmed-down guardhouse still costs more than budgeted

By Emily Rose Finn

Manalapan's plan to replace the aging guardhouse at the entrance to Point Manalapan is back on the drawing board after bids for the work greatly exceeded what town commissioners had authorized — even after the town scaled back the design.

In May, the town told residents construction would start in July. There is still no contract, and commissioners have not settled on how to proceed.

Nine contractors met the Aug. 21 deadline for bidding to tear down the old guardhouse and build a new one, with prices ranging from $489,000 to $897,935. Commissioners originally earmarked $100,000, but the budget grew to $300,000 as the town moved from renovation to replacement.

At an Aug. 11 commission meeting, before bids came in, Town Manager Eric Marmer said he anticipated "the cost to be higher than what was budgeted due in part to the pile foundations required," according to minutes of the meeting.

The low bid came from KER Construction LLC, but staff did not recommend awarding a contract based on its cost.

Staff on Sept. 8 asked commissioners for direction on two options: to redesign and rebid the project or to defer the project and fold it into the new Town Hall/Police Department construction project.

Staff cited "the upcoming season and potential disruption associated with construction in that area" as a reason to wait.

Some suggestions for cutting costs included building on a slab instead of pilings, and eliminating a golf-cart overhang and feature window.

Commissioners said a reworked design put back out to bid should draw better prices, and that the town has only what it budgeted to spend.

Commissioners leaned toward redesigning and rebidding rather than folding the guardhouse into the Town Hall project.

In a September email to The Coastal Star, Marmer said the town plans to keep the design the same, with small changes to bring the cost down.

"We are going to see if we can get it under the 300k the commission is allowing us to spend on the project, if not we will end up folding into the bigger Town Hall/PD building," Marmer wrote.

The current guardhouse on Lands End Road dates to 1968 and is in too poor shape to renovate, officials said.

In March, architects from Currie Sowards Aguila presented a glass-and-coquina design with a steel trellis over the entry lanes, estimated at about $340,000. The town's Architectural Commission rejected it, and the trellis was dropped.

In April, commissioners settled on a simpler "governmental style" building of about 248 square feet, with larger windows, two guard booths, a kitchenette and a restroom that meets federal disability (ADA) standards. ★

Holding tax rate steady means an extra $471,000 from taxpayers

By Emily Rose Finn

Manalapan's town tax rate will stay at $3 per $1,000 of taxable value for another year, though most property owners will still pay more because property values keep climbing.

Town commissioners on Sept. 28 unanimously approved the rate and a $9.74 million general fund budget — a drop of 25.8% from the previous budget — with no discussion. The new budget and property tax rate are for the fiscal year that started Oct. 1.

It is the fifth straight year the town has held the rate at $3 per $1,000 of taxable value. The owner of a home with a taxable value of $10 million this year will pay $30,000 in town taxes, an increase of almost $2,000 from the previous year based on the town's average increase in home values.

Taxable property values in Manalapan rose 6.94% this year, to about $2.59 billion, according to town budget documents. As a result, the unchanged rate is expected to bring in about $7.49 million in property taxes, roughly $471,000 more than last year.

That puts the rate 6.65% above the town's rollback rate of $2.81 per $1,000 — the rate that would bring in the same property tax revenue as last year.

The drop in the general fund budget, which pays for day-to-day operations including police — and is supported by the property taxes — was from land purchase, mostly, including the land for a new Town Hall, officials said. The town's overall budget, including for water and other services, is $15.5 million.

The town's $516,032 capital budget includes $175,000 to design the new Town Hall and $200,000 for police and town vehicles.

A separate $1.065 million utility capital budget will pay for several water projects, including design work to meet new federal limits on PFAS, also known as "forever chemicals." ★

MEET YOUR NEIGHBOR: Suzanne Snider

Suzanne Snider, curator of the Museum of Central American Art in Delray Beach, holds a copy of the book she co-wrote with her business partner, Mark Ford. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

Delray Beach resident Suzanne Snider has spent a lifetime on the move, both geographically and while following her career path.

When she was 20, newly married and living in West Palm Beach, her husband, Court, gave her a camera. "I fell in love with photography, which opened my eyes to art and design," she remembers.

At 21, she followed her husband to Korea after he was drafted. "That was a wonderful experience living there for a year. It opened my eyes to the world and a new culture," she said.

Then for the next 30 years, this mother of two and grandmother of two hop-skipped between Florida, North Carolina and Costa Rica, working in art-related venues, owning a surf shop, developing children enrichment programs and picking up print-making. She also managed to finish college and study art history.

"It only took me 36 years to get my degree. I graduated summa cum laude, thank you," said Snider, 77.

Her time in Costa Rica deepened her connection to art, she said. "I was introduced to local contemporary artists who wanted to be represented in the United States. I still represent them and have their artwork. They include Enar Cruz, Alejandro Villalobos, Edgar Zuñiga and Marcia Salas."

After returning to Florida, Snider crossed paths with Delray Beach resident Mark Ford, an entrepreneur, art collector, author and philanthropist, and the next chapter of her life took off. With him, she's started art galleries, participated in art shows, built his collection of Central American art and written a book, Central American Modernism.

In 2025, they opened the Museum of Central American Art at The Annex, 290 SE Second Ave., Delray Beach.

"Our mission statement is basically to bring awareness to Central American art and to educate about the richness of the cultures," she said.

Its fourth show, "The Masters of the Matrix: Latin American Printmaking," is on exhibit through January 2027, along with related monthly events.

For this show, Snider has "branched out," she said. "I've incorporated a lot of Mexican, South American and Cuban works from Mark's collection: etchings, serigraphs, mixographs, stone lithographs, woodblock printing, piezographs and xylographs, which was invented by a Costa Rican artist."

And the momentum continues. She's working on a new book, Central American Postmodernism.

"I didn't realize that I was going to be embarking on such a satisfying and important career at the age of 59," she said. "It took me by surprise. Meeting Mark Ford and working with him has been such a gift to me, as well as working with so many people in Central America.

"In 2021, I published a children's book about one day in my life in Costa Rica — Groovy Grandma's Surf Shop."

— Christine Davis

Q. Where did you grow up and go to school? How do you think that has influenced you?

A. I grew up in Palm Beach County in a wonderful community that no longer exists called the town of Golfview. We could walk to the elementary school and the junior high school. I think those days gave me my sense of assuredness and living without fear. Growing up with four brothers gave me a competitive spirit.

Palm Beach High School was considered to be located at the western border of the city of West Palm Beach in the 1960s, and we never suspected the growth that would occur. Military Trail was at the edge of the "boonies."

I received my associate degree from Palm Beach Junior College. It was then only a two-year program at the campus on Congress Avenue. Classes with Watson B. Duncan III opened my eyes to literature. I continued my studies at UNC-Charlotte and North Carolina State, where I specialized in print-making and art history. And the world of art opened its arms to me.

Q. What professions have you worked in? What professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

A. Personally, I think all we experience influences our futures. Graphic design, teaching, being the director of a children's museum and owning a surf shop in Tamarindo gave me skills that I use in my most-proud-of and current career of being the curator and director of the Museum of Central American Art.

Q. What advice do you have for a young person selecting a career today?

A. Realize what you don't like doing and discover what you do well.

Q. How did you choose to make your home in Delray Beach?

A. After living five years in Costa Rica, I returned to represent Costa Rican artists in the USA and being close to Miami — the Latin American capital of the world — made sense. I stayed with a dear friend, Judy Testa, and exhibited in her Via in Palm Beach next to her restaurant for a few months. Then rented a cute house in Lake Worth, a walking town, near the bridge.

I had little success selling the artwork on weekends and found supporting work creating children's enrichments and working part time in a frame shop in Delray Beach. It was there I encountered my business partner, Mark Ford, in 2008.

Delray was just then on the cusp of being voted "best small tourist town," most of the shops on the Avenue were locally owned, and it was a joy to walk or bicycle everywhere any time or day. And the beach here — exceptional. ... It felt right and I found myself embarking on a new adventure in life at the age of 59.

Q. What is your favorite part about living in Delray Beach?

A. Living near the beach and in a town that embraces walking.

Q. What book are you reading now?

A. One by a favorite author, Haruki Murakami, The City and its Uncertain Walls.

Q. What music do you listen to when you need inspiration? When you want to relax?

A. For work I like Strunz & Farah as well as Hermanos Gutierrez, and to relax, blues and the oh-so nostalgic music of the '60s and '70s.

Q. Do you have a favorite quote that inspires your decisions?

A. To predict the future, create it.

Q. Have you had mentors in your life? Individuals who have inspired your life decisions?

A. Mother Nature is my constant mentor. Living in South Korea for a year when I was 21 opened my eyes to the world.

Q. If your life story were made into a movie, who would you want to play you?

A. Helen Mirren, of course.

The museum is at 290 SE Second Ave. Hours are by appointment noon to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday. 561-808-8587; mocaart.org

Town allows A1A tunnel work to extend into November despite onset of season

By Emily Rose Finn

A contractor building a private pedestrian tunnel under State Road A1A has Manalapan's permission to keep working on the tunnel for about two weeks into the start of the town's tourist season in November.

Last year, a monthslong tunnel project in the spring caused extended traffic tie-ups on A1A due to lane closures. That led commissioners to pass an ordinance prohibiting tunnel constructions between Nov. 1 and April 14 without advance approval of the Town Commission.

The request for 1860 S. Ocean Blvd. to keep its tunnel project going into November was the first to come before the commission since the ordinance took effect. Commissioners approved the request at their Sept. 8 meeting.

The passageway will connect a main house on the west side of A1A with a beach house on the east side. RWB Construction Management asked to keep working "through November 14."

Commissioners originally approved the 1860 S. Ocean tunnel on May 20, 2025 — the same meeting at which they adopted the tunnel ordinance.

The contractor blamed the delay on the state, which did not approve the work until Aug. 24, after three years of permitting.

"The controlling factor in this schedule has been the Florida Department of Transportation permitting process," RWB wrote in a Sept. 3 letter. "Installation could not lawfully commence prior to that issuance." The company promised to follow an approved traffic plan and keep the right-of-way "secured and passable."

While construction is underway, traffic shifts onto a temporary bypass lane and a police officer is on site daily, able to take manual control of the traffic signal if needed.

Though they approved the work into November, commissioners were concerned about the impact of the tunnel project combined with A1A lane closures to the south for water pipe work being done in Ocean Ridge, which they said already backs up traffic on busy weekends.

"Then it's like Frogger going down to A1A," Vice Mayor Simone Bonutti said. ★

Commission recasts shark fishing under nuisance rules

By Emily Rose Finn

Manalapan has recast its shore-based shark fishing crackdown as a nuisance law, leaving fishing regulation to the state while keeping a 100-yard buffer between hooks and swimmers.

Commissioners revamped an ordinance they approved in May because of concerns that it might be perceived as stepping on laws that give the state the power to regulate fishing. The new version, approved at the Sept. 8 commission meeting, renames the code section "Prohibited Fishing Related Nuisance Activities, and Other Nuisance Activities."

It still treats fishing with hooks, line and bait within 100 yards of swimmers, beachgoers, paddleboarders, kayakers or jet skiers as a prohibited nuisance. It is included with other town regulations that ban trespassing on private beaches, provide for littering and noise violations, and, during sea turtle nesting season, ban nighttime beach lighting other than red or amber.

The ordinance acknowledges that the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission has authority over shore-based shark fishing, and it lists the state's rules: a permit, circle hooks, cable cutters on hand, no chumming and no drones. The revised language "is a direct result of discussions the Town had with FWC based on FWC recommendations," a staff report said.

Residents are asked to report nuisance violations to town police and shark fishing violations to FWC or police. The ordinance authorizes signs at beach accesses and bridges. ★ involuntarily detained for a mental health evaluation — at least four times, including twice last year. He also had a previous run-in with police and attacked a hospital worker.

While PBSO withheld the name of the deputy, multiple sources have identified her to The Coastal Star as Donna Korb — familiarly known around town as "Deputy Donna" — who has been with PBSO for at least 25 years, including the last four in South Palm Beach.

The deputy, who Bradshaw said was taken to HCA Florida JFK Hospital in Atlantis to be treated for facial injuries and evaluated for a possible concussion, was released later the same day, officials said.

A fateful call

The incident unfolded around 7:35 a.m. on State Road A1A near Town Hall, which is on the same property as the substation. Magann picked up a phone there and told dispatch he needed medical assistance, officials said.

Korb responded solo to the call and asked the man how she could help. According to Bradshaw, Magann told her: "I need a car. I'm taking your car," before attacking her when she said no.

Bradshaw described the assault as "very, very violent."

"He finally pushes her back, knocks her off her feet. She hits her head on the ground in the back. He's on top of her, they're still wrestling for the gun, he finally starts beating her in the face and in the chest to see if he can knock her unconscious."

The deputy was able to get control of her gun and shot Magann, said Bradshaw, who described him as 5-feet-11 and 250 pounds and much bigger than the deputy.

"She saved her own life, without a doubt," Bradshaw said. "This guy was intent on getting that gun."

The shooting investigation closed A1A in town for about seven hours, Town Manager Jamie Titcomb said. Town officials canceled all meetings and services at Town Hall for the day.

The deputy was placed on paid administrative leave, according to standard agency protocol. The ongoing investigation includes the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, the Palm Beach County State Attorney's Office and PBSO's Violent Crimes Division.

Magann's background

Magann

Titcomb said law enforcement told him that Magann was a local resident who had been living with his mother in town.

He pleaded guilty in November 2025 to separate charges of assault on a law enforcement officer and battery on an emergency medical care provider, according to court records. He was on probation when the Sept. 17 attack took place, the sheriff said.

Both incidents took place in January 2025 after Manalapan police sought to pull Magann over for a traffic stop on A1A. Instead, according to the probable cause affidavit in that case, Magann repeatedly rammed the 2013 Hyundai Veloster he was driving into a parked police car, which had its emergency lights flashing. He left in the Hyundai and later, in the Ocean Inlet Park parking lot, fled on foot before being apprehended.

While in custody a couple of days later, he was taken from the Palm Beach County Jail to Neurobehavioral Hospital in West Palm Beach to be Baker acted, a West Palm Beach police report said. He arrived "argumentative and hostile" police were told. During intake, he rushed one of the medical care providers and hit him with a closed fist in the face, with a scuffle following as Magann continued to throw punches and kicks at the man, the police report said.

'Deputy Donna'

The struggle and shooting in South Palm Beach wasn't the first time Korb had encountered a life-or-death situation in town. On May 8, 2023, she didn't hesitate to rescue a woman who was drowning and fighting to get back to shore.

Irina Bereslavska, now 71, is a frequent visitor to the town from Manhattan. Korb had seen her going into the ocean for a late afternoon swim that day, and she grew concerned due to the current and the swimmer's age. Once Korb saw that Bereslavska was struggling, she notified dispatch, shed her uniform and ran into the water to rescue the Latvian-born woman.

"That's when years of dive experience seemed to kick in, knowing the danger she was in if not reached quickly," Korb told The Coastal Star three years ago.

Korb with help from residents got a pool rescue ring float, then swam out and handed the float to the distressed swimmer and guided her back to shore.

Without Korb's intervention, the likelihood Bereslavska would have drowned was high, authorities said.

"She helped me a lot and I really appreciate it," Bereslavska said when contacted by phone after the shooting. She had been visiting her friend Elena Kleer in the Mayfair condominium at the time of her 2023 rescue. "The town is lucky to have her. I was lucky to have her there looking out for me."

Korb has also impressed former Mayor Bonnie Fischer, a town resident for 52 years.

"As a woman and mayor for many years, I've gotten to know Donna Korb and recognize her ability to navigate from a position of strength and fortitude. She has been a valuable asset to the town." ★

TENNIS

there are a lot of questions I want answered."

The tennis management team is responsible for hiring and overseeing the work of coaches, scheduling practice times, putting together teams to represent the facility and staging matches against other facilities. It also makes sure the courts, nets and fencing around the courts are all in good shape. However, maintenance of the grounds is the responsibility of the city.

A list of complaints

Sall, fellow coach Parker Evertsen and a handful of the women who have left Delray Beach programs were forthcoming about the problems and concerns they have with JCD, which has no affiliation with the Delray Beach Open held every February.

Players and coaches said JCD co-owner Sharon Painter is almost never on site (JCD also manages several golf courses), with the primary targets of their complaints being managers Jeff Bingo at the Tennis Center and Jennifer Fiedler at Swim, formerly know as Laver's International Tennis Resort.

Among the complaints:

Verbal abuse: Players and coaches alike said both managers frequently berate everyone from players and coaches to maintenance workers.

"The way they talk to the coaches is really inexcusable," said Kelli Evertsen of Boca Raton, who left Delray Beach tennis after five years to play in Boynton Beach. She added about Fiedler: "The way I saw her treat (Sall) is a big reason why I left. She would yell at him, curse at him in front of all the ladies. She yelled at ladies."

Fiedler could not be reached for comment.

Player retention: While Bingo said it's not true that the city has lost 70 players — a figure Schlecker used at the commission meeting — he said 23 players left and 24 new ones have come on board. Critics say the attitude toward player retention is all wrong.

"When you go to meetings, they say they don't care if people leave, they'll just replace them," Kelli Evertsen said. "And they have."

Bingo insisted most of the departures are women and they comprise only 3% of the business. But Parker Evertsen — Kelli's son who is another one of the coaches who left — estimated there have been just as many men as women leaving.

"Jeff actually said to me, 'Retention is not our goal,'" Sall said. "'You come from a country club, where you have to take care of the people. These people are city members; we don't have to take care of them. We don't care if they stay or go.'"

Others said they have heard similar comments from Bingo, but he "absolutely" denied ever making such statements when asked by The Coastal Star.

Coach David Sall gives instruction to Delray Beach resident Ann Pellegrino at the Boynton Beach Tennis and Pickleball Center. Sall left his work at the Delray Beach tennis centers, citing poor conditions and management there. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

"It is false and completely contrary to how I manage the city's facilities, finances and treat our members and guests," Bingo said. "For nearly nine years, my focus has been on serving the public, improving programming, and operating successful facilities for the city of Delray Beach."

Kelli Evertsen said the Delray Beach program is down to five teams, less than half the number that are at Boynton Beach.

"They have courts (at Swim) that are empty on a daily basis," Sall said. "It just amazes me."

Poor maintenance: Bingo insists the Delray Beach courts "have never been in better condition," but the critics say that's not the case — and that the courts at Swim are particularly bad.

The center court at Delray Tennis Center "is in very good condition, because that's where they do the tournament and commercials," said Cristina Gomez, who left for Boynton Beach despite living within walking distance of the downtown courts. "Everything else is in very poor condition. There's nothing great in terms of those courts at all."

Kelli Evertsen said the courts are "embarrassing" at Swim.

"Half the courts, the windscreens are flopping, torn down, old, faded, with holes," she said. "Weeds growing up. Weeds all over the courts. It's awful.

"I don't think any of us expected it to look like a country club. We go to St. Andrews to play, Woodfield; we're not expecting class. But you would expect there are tables that aren't beat up, chairs that aren't missing backs."

Reached by phone, City Commissioner Juli Casale defended JCD and its managers. She plays regularly on the courts and says it's up to the city to budget the money needed to maintain them properly.

Antiquated sign-up system: Gomez said Delray Beach is the only program she has been to in the past several years that doesn't use a computer sign-up system, preferring to have clients sign in on sheets of paper torn into quarters.

"They lost my credit card number because they put it on a piece of paper," Gomez said. "The customer service is just terrible."

Swim "was just neglected," Parker Evertsen said. "Wait in line, give your credit card, and now you're running late because there's a line out the door."

Unprofessional behavior: Bingo and Fiedler not only manage their courts but also serve as coaches. Kelli Evertsen and Gomez said Fiedler has removed a coach, taken over a team and taken credit for its success.

Sall said Fiedler would "come on my court and chastise me in front of my clientele, that I don't know what I'm doing. That's after me teaching for 40 years."

Gomez said Bingo would be constantly interrupted by other duties when giving her lessons.

"Out of the hour I would get 45 or 50 minutes," Gomez said. "It became annoying. So instead of saying something I said, 'I'm done.'"

Weighing the differences

FM Tennis, co-owned by Brandon Flanagan, is one of the five firms being interviewed in Delray Beach. The company won the contract for the Boynton Beach courts in 2025 and installed Felipe Puleo as manager there.

Players who have left Delray Beach said they liked that Puleo — unlike Bingo and Fiedler — gives no lessons. The three coaches who left said the computer system in use makes everything easier and they are earning a higher percentage from their lessons than they did in Delray Beach.

"I was a bit apprehensive going to work there," Sall said, "but (Puleo) runs a very professional operation."

Casale said the Boynton Beach program is "much more expensive" than Delray Beach's, acknowledging Boynton Beach officials seem to put a higher priority on their program than Delray Beach does.

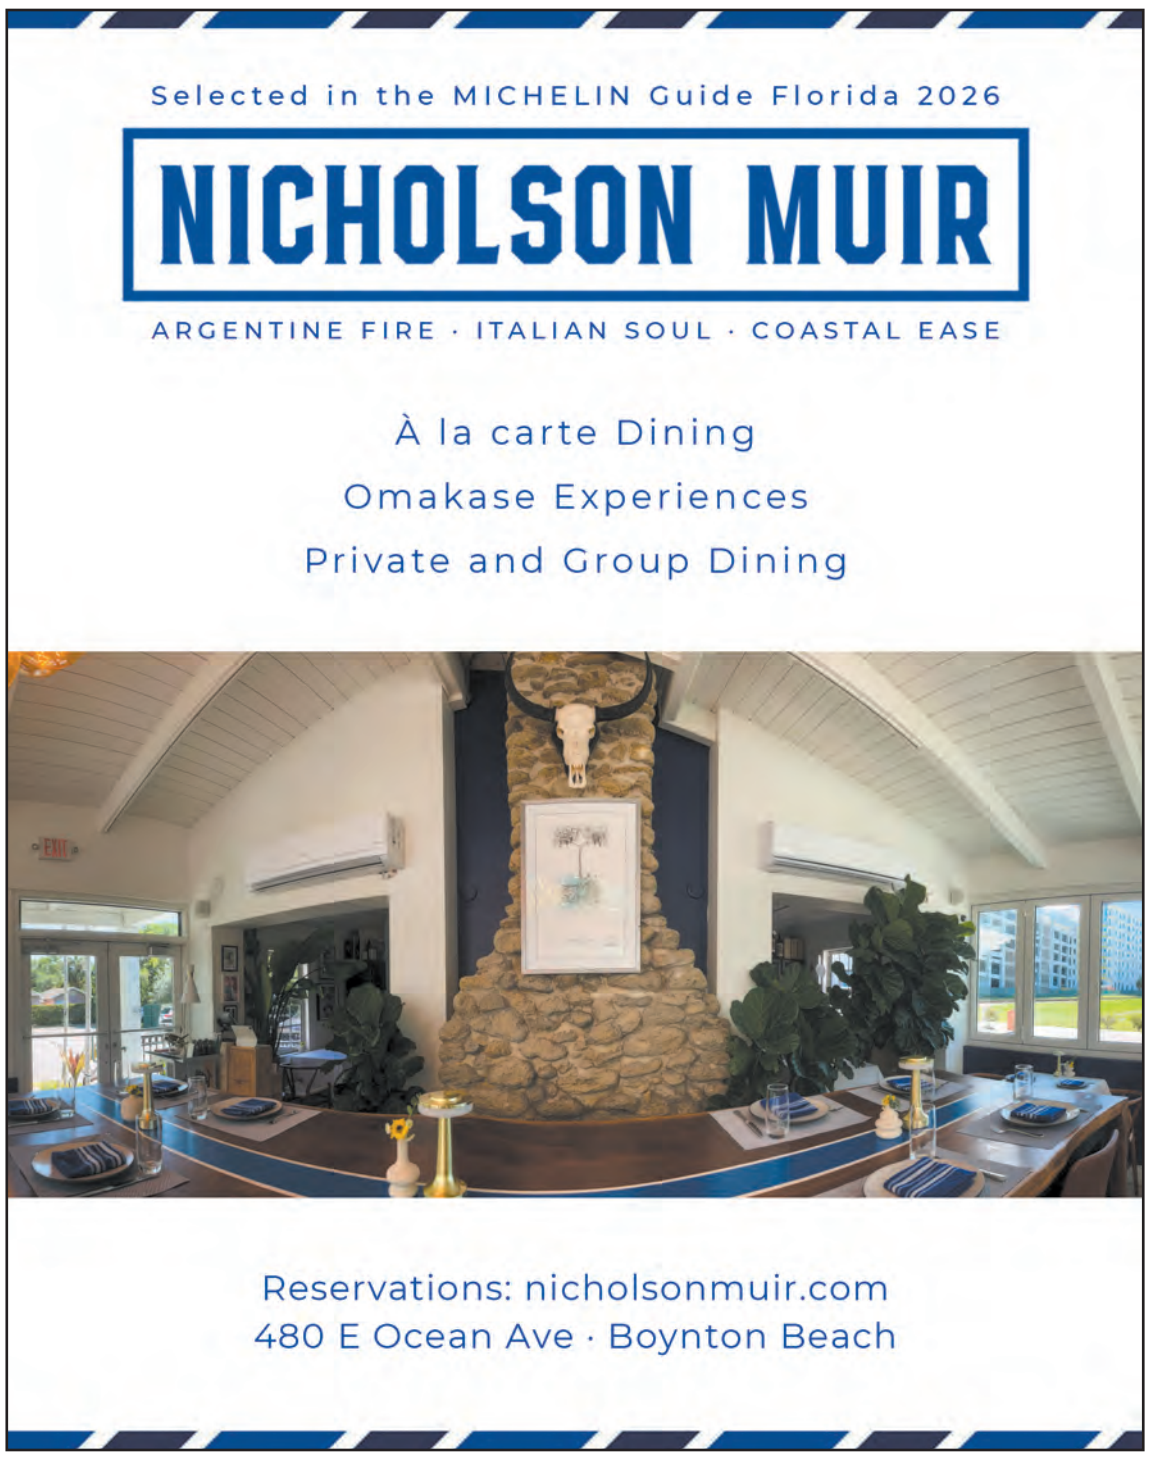

Kelli Evertsen said it was frustrating that despite the many complaints players have lodged with park officials about JCD, the company is still the recommended firm.

"Are you kidding me?" she asked.

At the commission meeting, City Attorney Lynn Gelin said that not only was JCD the top-scoring firm interviewed by the staff selection committee, but by a wide margin.

Not long after the August commission meeting, a flyer circulated asking the public to email the commissioners voicing support for another contract for JCD — and Casale said many have. Bingo vehemently denied involvement, but Mayor Carney sounded skeptical.

Carney said he likes Painter very much, "but this is not the way to show there's a level playing field." ★

Lantana

Demolition for Lantana Village Square expected by end of year

By Mary Thurwachter

It's been almost seven years since Kmart shuttered in Lantana. The 84,000-square-foot building at 1201 S. Dixie Highway remains empty and an adjacent building fronting on Greynolds Road is giving off serious ghost town vibes with all the businesses — including Lantana Pizza, a local favorite — having vacated the premises.

The 18-acre shopping center site is being redeveloped into Lantana Village Square, a mixed-use residential and retail community. Signs of impending growth haven't been noticeable — although FPL trucks have been working behind the old Kmart building, according to tenants of the shopping center.

Integra, the developer, "has been working closely with staff on some very minor amendments to the previously approved site plan," said Nicole Dritz, Lantana's director of development. "They did apply for demo permits; however, those were abandoned. There are no current demo permits. Integra has indicated they would like to start demo this fall. They have submitted building permits for the new structures, which are under review. There are some conditions of approval that they must meet before permits will be issued, such as $45,000 for transit upgrades as well as impact fees."

Selma Rabelo, who is managing the project for the developer, said Integra is hoping to get the project underway before the end of the year. "We're excited to move forward with this project," which she said would be "welcoming to the local community."

With Kmart closed, the largest retail tenant remaining in the shopping center is Winn-Dixie, which has a multiyear lease and occupies 165,000 square feet. There's also a 9,000-square-foot storefront housing West Marine, which has been at the site for more than eight years and plans to stay put.

But change is coming.

The town-approved site plan includes a phased redevelopment with 426 dwelling units and 21,967 square feet of ground-floor commercial space.

"Phase I includes three-story buildings with 307 dwelling units centered around a main-street-style design concept featuring approximately 12,000 square feet of commercial space, a large public open space, wide pedestrian sidewalks, outdoor seating areas, elevated streetscape furnishings, enhanced landscaping, electric vehicle charging stations, and modern coastal architectural elements," according to the Town Manager Report on the town's website.

"The design emphasizes walkability, sustainability, and the creation of a vibrant mixed-use environment intended to complement the surrounding community."

Town code permits 15 units per acre, and the master plan allows for 25, so the town agreed to change the permitted number to 25. Units will include studios and one-, two- and three-bedroom apartments. ★

Popular pizza restaurant to reopen on Lantana Road

By Mary Thurwachter

It looked like curtains for Lantana Pizza when it shuttered at 467 Greynolds Circle in April. Dino and Fatime Ismajli, who ran the popular eatery there for 27 years, thanked loyal customers and said it was time to retire.

But it appears the restaurant — where Town Council members frequently gathered after meetings at Town Hall across the street — will be back for a second act in a new location.

News of Lantana Pizza's reemergence became clear on Sept. 17 when the council held a meeting to consider a special exception to its code allowing the property owners, Lantana Partners, LLC, to make renovations, paving the way for the restaurant to move in.

The request included renovations and modifications to the exterior facade of the building at 618 W. Lantana Road, which was home to Pearl's Next Generation Restaurant for 51 years until the restaurant closed in 2016. More recently, Lantana Tavern operated there from May 2023 through July 2026.

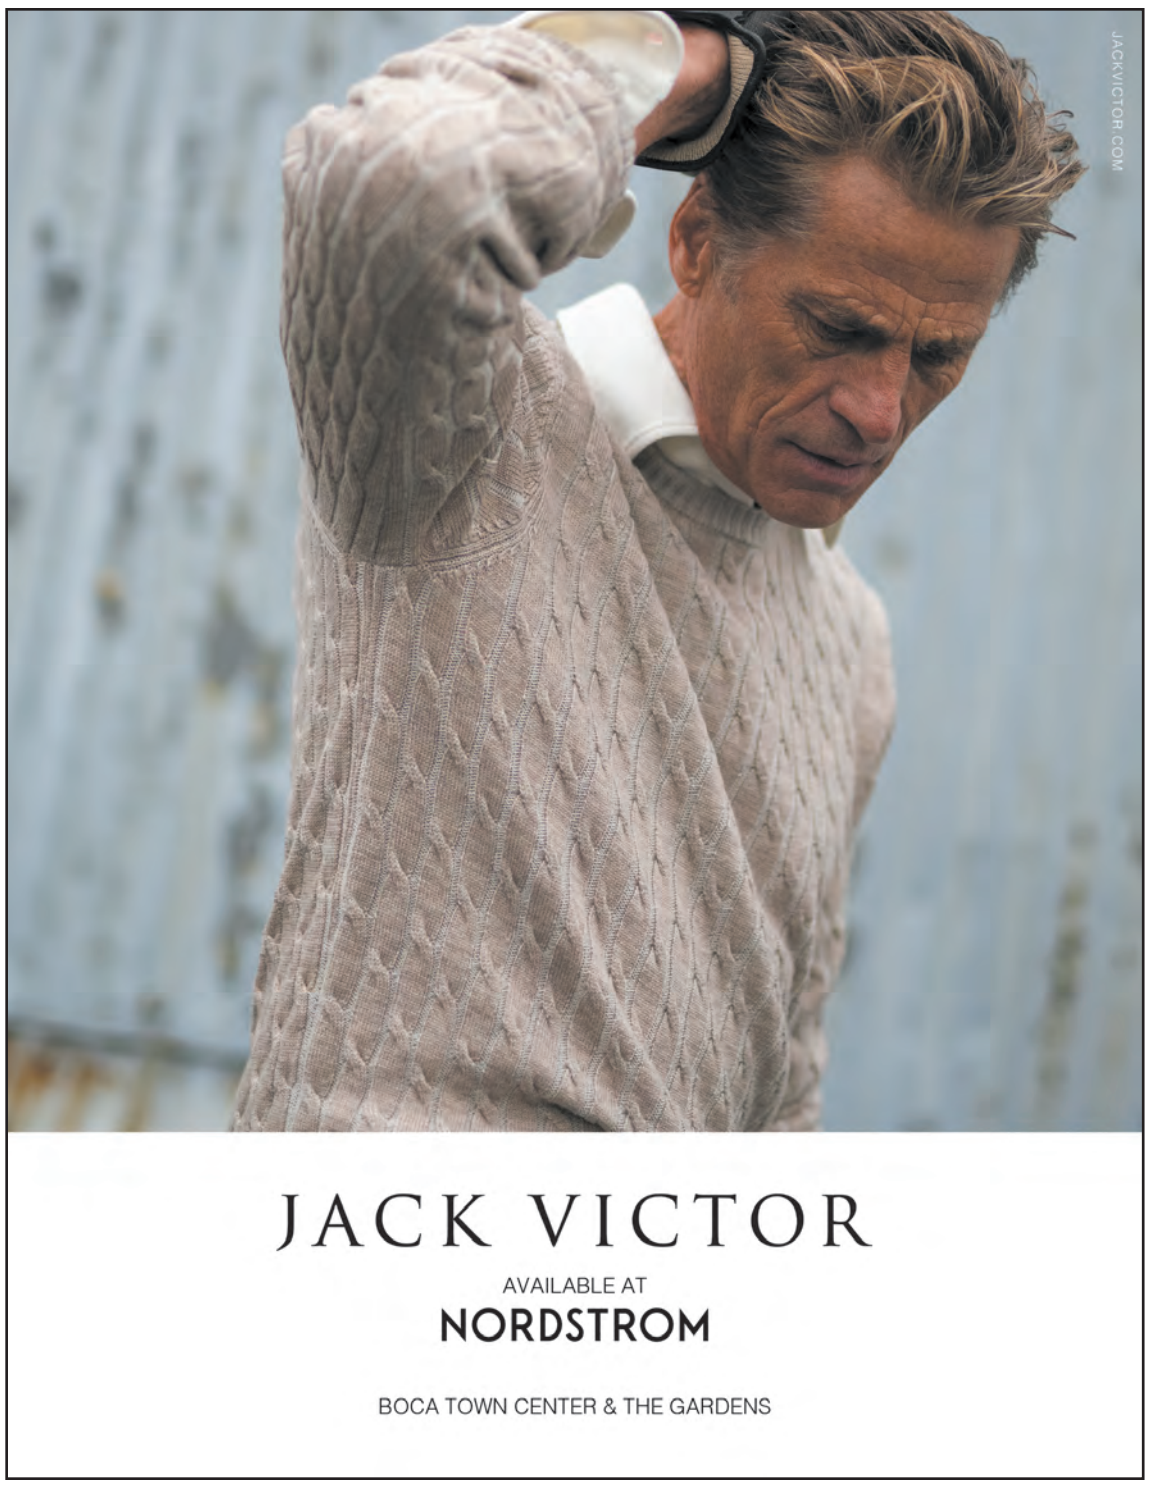

"The building footprint and overall square footage will remain unchanged," said Development Services Director Nicole Dritz. "The application was submitted because of a proposed change in tenancy and is intended to establish the new tenant's use of the property. Existing access points, parking areas, and operational characteristics will remain unchanged."

Inside, the restrooms will be rebuilt for ADA compliance.

Neighbors of the Lantana Road property expressed concerns about late night noise, but the special exception is contingent on the restaurant's closing its kitchen at 11 p.m. And Dino Ismajli said his pizza place was a restaurant, not a bar, although drinks are served.

The strip mall on Greynolds Circle where the pizza place had been located was next to a former Kmart and is set to be razed to make way for a planned mixed-use development, Lantana Village, which will bring 426 apartments to the corner of Dixie Highway and Hypoluxo Road.

Originally when they learned they would need to move the business, the Ismajlis planned to move to another location in the development, But they later changed their minds and decided to close on April 4. ★

With tax rate unchanged, town to collect $495,000 more in taxes

Lantana's budget comes with no big surprises, with a tax rate of $3.75 for every $1,000 of taxable value for the fifth consecutive year. The Town Council formally adopted the budget after a final public hearing on Sept. 17.

The $3.75 rate necessary to fund the town's newly approved $19.1 million general fund budget is 6.2% above the "no new taxes" rollback rate of $3.53 per $1,000.

Though the rate is the same, the town expects that will provide $495,000 more in property tax revenue in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1 because property values are higher. "While property values have increased, the budget continues to take a conservative approach, with a planned use of $300,000 in building permit reserves to balance the general fund," Finance Director Stephen Kaplan said.

The general fund covers the cost of the town's day-to-day operations, supported by property tax revenues.

In developing the town's overall $32.4 million budget, officials used the council's long-term priorities. Some of those are maintaining infrastructure, continuing beautification projects, promoting responsible development, attracting and retaining valuable employees, attracting businesses to Ocean Avenue, resuming dune restoration, supporting the library, and enhancing public safety.

"We use them because for the most part, they really work well," Town Manager Brian Raducci said of the priorities.

Raducci said the town is aware of future potential headwinds, such as Florida's Amendment 3 on the November ballot that would significantly reduce property taxes coming from homesteaded properties if approved by 60% of voters.

"We've taken steps to manage costs including reducing our property casualty general liability trust expenses by approximately $150,000, and with Amendment 3's uncertainty are addressing staff levels through attrition where appropriate."

Kaplan said utility rates will increase 4% and the water and sewer fund is being balanced with the planned use of $1.4 million from reserves.

The budget includes $551,000 in capital spending in the general fund that will go toward town improvements, fund the town library and pay for police equipment. Also included in the budget is a 3.3% cost-of-living adjustment for employees and a merit increase of up to 4%.

Mauro J. Walker

OCEAN RIDGE — Mauro J. Walker, beloved husband, devoted father, grandfather, great-grandfather, accomplished engineer, and lifelong problem-solver, died Aug. 28. He was 90.

Born Nov. 21, 1935, to Nancy and Frank Walker in the coal-mining town of Hazleton, Pennsylvania, he grew up in a modest home where hard work, ingenuity, and family were central to daily life. His childhood was filled with homemade pasta, gardening, and hunting in the Pennsylvania woods with his father and friends. He loved to joke that he had been a paperboy since the age of 7 — and that his route went uphill both ways.

Mr. Walker was the first in his family to attend college, graduating from Penn State in 1956 with a degree in electrical engineering. In 1971, he joined Motorola, beginning a remarkable career that would help shape the future of electronics manufacturing.

Throughout his career, Mr. Walker was recognized for his visionary contributions to electronic packaging, manufacturing automation, and high-reliability systems. At Motorola, he established advanced manufacturing technology centers and championed innovations in semiconductor packaging and high-speed surface-mount assembly that helped enable increasingly small and sophisticated portable communications devices, including pagers, two-way radios, and the emerging cellular telephone. He ultimately became Motorola's senior vice president and director of manufacturing and was elected a corporate vice president.

Mr. Walker's influence extended well beyond Motorola. He was a founding leader of the National Electronics Manufacturing Initiative, now known as the International Electronics Manufacturing Initiative, helping bring together leaders from industry, government and academia to establish technology road maps and advance collaborative research and development.

He testified before Congress on the importance of maintaining American leadership in electronics manufacturing and worked with universities and industry to strengthen manufacturing research and education. He contributed to the formation of the MIT Leaders for Manufacturing program and manufacturing research centers at Georgia Tech and the University of Illinois, and he founded the IEEE International Manufacturing Technology Symposium.

His contributions to engineering and technology earned him election as an IEEE Fellow and numerous professional honors, including the IEEE Special Manufacturing Technology Award, the Society of Manufacturing Engineers' Total Excellence in Electronic Manufacturing Award, and, in 2012, the IEEE Components, Packaging and Manufacturing Technology Award, recognizing his worldwide contributions to electronic manufacturing, technology and packaging through technical innovation and collaborative leadership.

But above all, Mr. Walker cherished his family.

He leaves behind his beloved wife of six decades, Julia McGrath Walker; their four children, Frank (Gina Bettis Walker), Mary Anne (Tom Hilliard), Michael, and David (Chris Deveraux Walker); 10 grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. He is also survived by his sisters, Mary Ann Walker and Christine Dundas (Bob Dundas), and his brother, Michael Walker (Diane Walker).

After retiring from Motorola in 1998, Mr. Walker devoted himself to his family. Together, he and Julia built homes in Florida and Pennsylvania designed to bring their children and grandchildren together. Holidays, birthdays, graduations, golf games, lawn bowling tournaments, and countless ordinary days filled those homes with generations of memories.

Mr. Walker leaves a legacy measured not only in technological innovation and professional achievement, but in the family he built, the people he encouraged, the problems he solved, and the love he gave so freely. His children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren were privileged to witness through Mauro and Julia what enduring love, commitment, faith, and a purpose-driven life look like.

He will be deeply missed and forever loved.

A funeral Mass at St. Vincent Ferrer Catholic Church preceded burial Sept. 4 at Our Lady Queen of Peace Cemetery, Royal Palm Beach.

Boynton Beach

City doesn't bow to budget pressures, cuts tax rate 7%

By Connor Walter Brickel and Larry Barszewski

Boynton Beach commissioners didn't hold the line on the city's property tax rate this year. They dug deeply into it.

While officials in some towns and cities feel they've done a good job if they're able to keep the tax rate the same as the previous year — or if they make a small reduction in the rate that leads to a tax increase anyway — Boynton Beach commissioners went all in.

They committed to cutting the tax rate and they didn't stop at the rollback — the "no new taxes" rate that the state suggests municipalities should aim for — but went almost 3% below that rate.

The result: City property owners will pay more than a half-dollar less in city taxes for each $1,000 of taxable property value. The unanimous commission on Sept. 16 dropped the previous rate of $7.75 per $1,000 to $7.2052 per $1,000 for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, a drop of 7%.

The owner of a property with a taxable value of $250,000 will pay $1,801 in city taxes this year, a drop of about $75 from the previous year.

The move comes as the city, which had the fourth-highest tax rate among Palm Beach County's 39 municipalities, considers other options for cost savings. It has been in discussions to explore the possibility of having the county take over its fire rescue services and its water utility, and it has broached the idea of teaming up with Ocean Ridge to set up a water authority that would also remove the utility and its increasing costs from the city's budget.

Going under roll back will require the city to draw about $1.8 million from its reserves to balance the city's $138.3 million general fund budget, according to city officials.

"This year's budget was very, very tight and there's no juice left to squeeze right now in that lemon. We're not possible to find that 1.8 where we are right now," Chief Financial Officer Alan Lawson said. "So we're looking at drawing that money out of fund balance in order to facilitate this new proposed rate."

Commissioners shared concerns over drawing from the city's operating reserves, which Lawson said sit at around $33 million.

"I know that we've been doing a great job with increasing our fund balance, but I feel like every time we turn around, we're taking a little bit out of fund balance to make up a difference for here and there," Commissioner Aimee Kelley said.

Currently, the reserves allow the city about three to five months of operating costs, according to City Manager Daniel Dugger.

The commission also approved increasing the fire assessment by $25, to $170 annually starting Oct. 1. That will bring in an additional $1.7 million in revenue.

"When the City chose to adopt the rollback rate, the increase in the fire assessment helped offset part of the property tax revenue the general fund would otherwise have lost," Deputy City Manager Andrew Mack wrote in an email to The Coastal Star.

The new budget also assumes that a hiring freeze on all general fund positions — which are paid for with property tax dollars — remains. Under the adopted budget, open positions within the city will be harder to fill. ★

Delray Beach

Beach murder suspect accepts plea deal, doesn't admit guilt

By Jane Musgrave

Facing a possible life sentence, Mark David Anderson accepted a plea deal Sept. 23 that will allow him to be freed in two years in connection with the 2023 shooting death of a popular Delray Beach computer tech at a beachside condominium.

Anderson didn't admit guilt in connection with the gunshot slaying of 58-year-old Albert Camentz during an alcohol- and drug-fueled get-together at Berkshire by the Sea, 126 N. Ocean Boulevard in Delray Beach, about a block north of Atlantic Avenue.

Anderson

Instead, the 48-year-old Lake Worth Beach man took what is called a "best interest" plea. That means he didn't admit killing the man he barely knew, but acknowledged he could have been found guilty of second-degree murder at a trial that was set to begin days after he agreed to be punished.

Palm Beach County Circuit Judge Bradley Harper found Anderson guilty of a lesser charge of manslaughter. He sentenced him to five years in prison.

Harper gave Anderson credit for the 1,107 days he had already spent in the county jail. That means Anderson, who worked as a self-employed carpenter, will be released from prison in two years.

The plea deal ends a bizarre case that was compromised when one of the two witnesses — Jack Feinberg — fatally shot himself last summer.

Feinberg, former longtime director of the Broward Addiction Recovery Center, initially offered Delray Beach police little information and then refused to talk to them without a lawyer. Anderson's defense team used Feinberg's reluctance to help police solve his friend's murder to suggest that Feinberg, not Anderson, was the killer.

Defense attorneys Mike Dutko and Robert Gentile also focused on claims by Feinberg and his wife, Susan Schneider, who insisted they didn't realize Camentz had been shot. Instead of getting Camentz medical help, they drove him nearly six miles from Berkshire by the Sea to their home west of Delray Beach.

Camentz

Shawn Mahoney, who grew up with Camentz in Louisville, Kentucky, said he worried that the defense team could use Feinberg's suicide and his strange behavior after the shooting to sow doubts with the jury.

"The surety of a guilty verdict wasn't assured," Mahoney said, explaining why he was satisfied with the outcome of the case. Prosecutors discussed it with Camentz's family, which also signed off on it, he said.

While Anderson will spend only another two years behind bars, Mahoney said he was heartened that he will be on probation for four years. If Anderson violates that probation, he could be hauled back to court where he would face a possible 15 years in prison.

"The key for the family was that he didn't walk away," said Mahoney, who, like Camentz's family, watched the proceedings on a Zoom link.

"This guy is a cold-blooded murderer," said Mahoney, who lives in Flagstaff, Arizona. "He killed someone he met 10 minutes earlier."

The unfolding events

Camentz wasn't supposed to be at the impromptu party. It was hastily arranged when Anderson ran into Feinberg and Schneider at a bar in Boca Raton and invited them to the timeshare he was renting.

As the couple was driving to Anderson's timeshare, Camentz called Feinberg on the phone. Although Camentz didn't know Anderson, he agreed to join them.

During the party that began after midnight, cocaine, marijuana, ketamine, nitrous oxide along with beer and other alcohol flowed freely, according to court documents.

Both Feinberg and Schneider told police that the four were getting along well. A small disagreement erupted over what Feinberg described as religious views. But, Feinberg said, Camentz wasn't involved in the short-lived dispute.

As Camentz, Feinberg and Anderson talked, Schneider said she decided she wanted to take a dip in the hot tub, according to police. Schneider said she went to get a towel and Anderson disappeared into the bedroom.

When Anderson returned, Schneider said he was holding "a black object with both hands extended," police reported. Anderson pointed at Camentz and a deafening explosion ripped through the apartment.

Feinberg fell off the couch, but got to his feet laughing. Camentz clutched his chest, saying he couldn't breathe.

Schneider told police she didn't see any blood or holes in Camentz's shirt and thought he might be having a heart attack. She said she wanted to take Camentz to Delray Medical Center, but he said he was feeling better and wanted to sleep at the couple's house.

When they arrived at the house in the Floral Lakes community off West Atlantic Avenue, she said Camentz turned ghostly white and began complaining of chest pain. She called 911.

In a report, paramedics said they immediately determined that Camentz had been shot or stabbed. They took him to Delray Medical Center where he was pronounced dead of a gunshot wound to the chest.

Police investigation

When police approached Feinberg at the hospital to ask him about the shooting, Feinberg said he was going to the hot tub when he heard a loud bang.

He said he didn't know the name of the building where the shooting took place. His memory, he said, was muddled because he suffered from a "cognitive disorder," the detective wrote.

He didn't elaborate, but in his March 2023 resignation from the government-funded addiction treatment agency, Feinberg said that an unidentified illness he incurred during the pandemic had gotten worse.

After police told Feinberg that Camentz had died, he refused to answer any more questions without an attorney.

By the time police arrived at the couple's house, Feinberg was already there. Detective John Caceres Duque said he heard Feinberg yelling at his wife, telling her not to answer any questions without an attorney. Schneider ignored her husband. She told Caceres where the shooting occurred and identified Anderson as the shooter.

With Schneider's information, police went to Berkshire by the Sea on State Road A1A, found Anderson sleeping and arrested him. They found three blood spatters on an outside wall, later identified as belonging to Camentz.

A day after he refused to talk to Caceres, Feinberg changed his mind.

During a meeting with Caceres at the Ray Hotel in downtown Delray Beach, Feinberg confirmed what his wife had already told the detective. There hadn't been any animosity between Camentz and Anderson. The four were having a good time.

The shooting was inexplicable, he said.

"I don't know, why would he come out and done some sort of thing with some sort of weapon," he told Caceres.

A licensed mental health counselor, Feinberg suggested Anderson may have been in a psychotic state. He suspected that Anderson had taken liquid LSD, along with other drugs, causing him to hallucinate.

Mahoney said the chain of events that cost his decades-long friend his life are beyond comprehension. "Everything about it is just so unbelievable," he said.

He said he imagines sharing the story with Camentz. "'No way,' Al would say with his typical wry smile on his face," Mahoney said. "'There's no way that could have happened. Are you sure?'" ★

St. Thomas More priest officially removed

By Janis Fontaine

The Diocese of Palm Beach has officially removed the Rev. Alex J. Vargas from his duties at St. Thomas More Catholic Church near Boynton Beach following a review of his case by a diocesan board.

In May, the diocese reported that "serious allegations" of a sexual nature had been made against Vargas and he was placed on administrative leave until an independent investigation could be conducted and reviewed.

In a letter dated Sept. 5, Bishop Manuel de Jesus Rodríguez wrote that the findings from a professional investigation by Renaissance Associates concluded there was "insufficient information to substantiate the allegation of sexual abuse," but that there was "sufficient information to substantiate the following allegations: Sexual misconduct; abuse of power, authority, and/or office; financial malfeasance; and violations of the code of conduct."

The bishop appointed the Very Rev. Antony Pulikal as parochial administrator at St. Thomas More in June and announced the diocese was preparing "major reforms" to safeguard young people and vulnerable individuals. Changes were then introduced in August to the existing diocesan policies governing sexual behavior, including clergy conduct, reporting misconduct and the monitoring of priests.

The new code also made changes addressing digital interactions, including that all electronic communications with minors must be transparent and professional. The law also addresses reporting misconduct, and says clergy are required to report both their own misconduct as well as misconduct by others.

The new rules are being implemented on an experimental basis for two years, with similar codes of conduct applying to diocesan employees and volunteers.

As a result of the findings regarding Vargas, Rodriguez wrote that he "is deemed unsuitable for ministry." But the bishop also stressed that Vargas's removal is not a legal determination of guilt.

Vargas, 55, who had served St. Thomas More parish as an administrator and a vicar for over 15 years, will now participate in a canonical judicial process, which will make a final ruling under canon law on the charges.

No criminal or civil charges had been filed as of late September. ★

Shooter acquitted in 2024 killings at Boca beach hotel

By Jane Musgrave

A 32-year-old Boynton Beach man, who insisted he fatally shot two people in self defense, has been acquitted of murder charges in connection with the 2024 double homicide at a Boca Raton beach hotel.

A Palm Beach County Circuit Court jury on Sept. 10 found De'Vante Moss not guilty of murder charges in the gunshot slayings of 49-year-old Christopher Liszak and 32-year-old Chandler Dill, both of Oakland Park.

Jurors also cleared Moss of a charge of attempted murder for shooting a third man outside the 365 Ocean extended stay hotel, across North Ocean Boulevard from South Beach Park.

Despite his acquittal, Moss remains in the Palm Beach County jail on a $50,000 bond. He will return to court to be tried on a charge of being a felon in possession of a handgun in connection with the shooting.

The key evidence in the murder trial was hotel security video, which captured the chaos that erupted in the parking lot after Moss paid $100 to have sex with Dill.

Upset that Dill had taken a pouch that contained his cellphone and illicit drugs and put it in her purse, Moss grabbed the pocketbook and ran to his car, his attorneys said. Dill chased him. Liszak and Tuan Duy Hoang Ho, who was armed, joined the melee.

Moss tried to leave, but initially couldn't get his car to move.

Surrounded, with a disabled car and no way to call for help, Moss jumped out of the car and began shooting, his attorneys wrote.

Moss fled and was arrested a day later in Georgia. ★

Boynton Beach

Water rate increase affects Ocean Ridge, other communities

By Connor Walter Brickel

Boynton Beach utility customers — including residents of Ocean Ridge — will see a 17% increase in their water bills as the city prepares to meet new regulatory requirements and pay for water infrastructure upgrades.

The City Commission approved the rate increase on Sept. 16 following an earlier discussion at its Sept. 8 meeting.

The new rates were to take effect Oct. 1 and cover water, wastewater, storm water and reclaimed water. The wastewater and other rates don't apply to most island residential customers, as they have their own septic systems.

Boynton Beach has a contract to provide water to the town of Briny Breezes. The bill is reimbursed by Briny Breezes Inc., which covers the cost through residents' quarterly assessments.

Gulf Stream has also signed a contract with the city for bulk water services. The town has been receiving its water from Delray Beach. The switch is expected to take place sometime next year after a pipe connecting the city's water to the town is installed.

Ocean Ridge, whose residents have water meters and are billed directly by the city, has a contractual agreement with Boynton Beach that keeps its residents from being charged a 25% premium that the city assesses to other customers outside of the city. Instead, they are charged inside the city rates.

The previous in-city base charge was $16.32 a month. Those customers also paid $2.19 per 1,000 gallons for the first 7,000 gallons.

The new monthly in-city base charge has risen to $19.13 with a rate of $2.56 per 1,000 gallons for the first 7,000 gallons.

The city says the new rate adjustments will provide enough revenue to complete capital improvement projects and invest in water treatment.

The regulatory requirements to treat PFAS, or polyfluoroalkyl substances, at the two plants are one reason for the increase, Utility Director Poonam Kalkat said. PFAS are commonly known as "forever chemicals."

"That's what's driving the infrastructure costs. Our consultants have looked at what the probable cost for implementing this PFAS treatment at both plants is going to be, and that's close to $300 million," Kalkat said at the Sept. 8 meeting.

While displaying a graph, Boynton Beach's rate consultant, Ryan Smith, told the commission that the adjustments would remain 19% under inflation and that the city had identified approximately $30 million in grants and other proceeds that were available to offset residents' costs.

City Manager Daniel Dugger urged the commission to approve the resolution so the city could stay proactive in complying with federal regulations.

"Safe drinking water is not political. If you don't raise rates, and something catastrophic happens, you all will be held responsible." Dugger said at the Sept. 16 meeting. ★

CRA buys more land along downtown entryway

By Connor Walter Brickel

The Boynton Beach Community Redevelopment Agency continued its land acquisition efforts in September with the purchase of five parcels — including two in the Boynton Beach Boulevard corridor east of Interstate 95 — for more than $5.1 million.

The City Commission, assembled in its role as the CRA's governing board, approved the purchases on Sept. 16. According to staff reports, the two parcels purchased around Boynton Beach Boulevard are needed to support future downtown redevelopment. They are:

• 415 NW First Ave. The property, currently a single-family home, carried the highest financial premium for the city; its purchase price of $749,000 was 78% over the appraised value of $420,000.

• 101 NW Fourth St. The CRA paid $835,000 for this property, also currently a single-family home.

The commission considered a third residential parcel near the Boulevard — 204 NW First St. — with a $995,000 recommended purchase price but decided to see if it could reduce the cost.

"I'd be open to negotiating it and see if they would be open to that," said Vice Mayor Thomas Turkin. "I think there's an opportunity to get a better price."

The two properties fall within the Boynton Beach Boulevard entryway to downtown from I-95. According to staff reports, the CRA envisions an area where "pedestrians will be encouraged to walk along the broad sidewalks in the shade of mature trees to visit the various stores and restaurants along the corridor."

The CRA also approved the purchase of three more properties along MLK Jr. Boulevard with a total cost of $3.59 million. The area is known as the Heart of Boynton District. The city's goal is to bring more commercial and retail development to the area and preserve the historic cottages that have been there since the 1920s. ★

Auction of Atlantic Avenue properties brings in $38.2 million

A pair of Atlantic Avenue properties, home to Tramonti Ristorante, Sloan's Ice Cream, and Geronimo Tequila Bar and Southwest Grill, have a new owner.

DHBH Atlantic LLC, managed by William B. Himmelrich, and 60½ LLC, led by Beverly Hosokawa, sold the buildings at 105 and 111 E. Atlantic Ave., Delray Beach, at an auction on Sept. 10. Delray Beach-based Redfearn Capital, a private equity real estate firm, made the highest bid at $38.2 million and became the new owner.

The properties sit on 0.38 acre and comprise 23,290 square feet of retail, restaurant and office space. Besides the ground-floor retail tenants, one of the two second-floor office suites is also leased.

The buildings, which were constructed in 1952 and 1971, had not been sold in more than 20 years, said Katalyst Real Estate's Don Ginsburg, who worked with the sellers.

"The price per square foot of $1,674 is one of the highest ever for Atlantic Avenue," he said. "That same day, Redfearn Capital also acquired 123 E. Atlantic Ave. in a separate transaction, for $4 million, so now Alex Redfearn's company owns the entire block."

This auction resulted from an arbitration settlement between the two sellers over a partnership dispute that was settled in 2024. The dispute involved claims that the Hosokawa family had been taken advantage of as the late Dave Hosokawa's health declined. Under the settlement, both parties agreed to sell the properties together and divide the proceeds at closing. Beverly Hosokawa also received reconciliation payment.

Geronimo Tequila Bar and Southwest Grill is a tenant at 105 E. Atlantic Ave., which was taken over by Redfearn Capital in one of the richest sales along the Avenue. Photo provided

The attorneys involved included Gary Mansfield and David Stone of Mansfield, Bronstein & Stone LLP, who represented Beverly Hosokawa. They represented her individually, as trustee of the David "Dave" A. Hosokawa Revocable Trust, and as personal representative of David Hosokawa's estate. Hosokawa was CEO of TMP Worldwide, the parent company of Monster.com.

Himmelrich was represented by attorney Lance Shinder.

Representing the sellers were Cushman & Wakefield's Mike Ciadella, Scott O'Donnell and Miguel Alcivar, along with Katalyst Real Estate's Ginsburg and Adam Steinlauf. Cushman and Wakefield's Florida EDSF Team, Ron Granite and Jason Hochman, represented Redfearn Capital in securing financing for the acquisition.

Related Ross recently acquired the Boca Raton Innovation Campus, a 124-acre office and technology campus at 5000 T-Rex Ave. The acquisition represents Related Ross' first venture into Boca Raton. The 1.7-million-square-foot center was developed in the late 1960s as an IBM research and development facility. IBM's Boca Raton team developed the IBM Personal Computer, which was introduced in 1981.

"BRiC changed the course of technology once before for the region, and it will play an important role in what comes next," said Stephen M. Ross, chairman and CEO of Related Ross. "We have spent nearly 30 years investing in West Palm Beach, and this acquisition gives us the opportunity to bring that long-term commitment and experience to Boca Raton. We want to build on what is already working here and help create the conditions for more companies, talent and ideas to thrive."

The transaction was not listed in public records as of late September, nor was the financing Related Ross received from Ares Real Estate funds, which was arranged by Newmark.

The seller was a partnership group that included CP Group, Rialto, DRA Advisors and Las Olas Capital Advisors.

The group bought the property in 2021 for $320.2 million and made capital improvements that increased occupancy levels and rents. CP Group and a different set of partners acquired the property in 2018 for $179 million.

Related Ross will continue operating BRiC as an office and technology campus while pursuing a longer-term mixed-use vision for the property.

"With D-Wave at BRiC and FAU nearby, Boca Raton has a strong foundation for attracting more technology companies and developing local talent," said Jordan Bargas, executive vice president at Related Ross. "We see BRiC becoming a major center of that growth, and we're looking forward to creating a workplace environment with a curated mix of amenities, retail and restaurants that can evolve with the businesses here."

Bargas is referring in part to D-Wave Quantum's decision to move its corporate headquarters from Palo Alto, California, to BRiC. Separately, Florida Atlantic University plans to install a D-Wave Advantage2 quantum computer on its campus. The project will support research, education and job training in the field.

In addition to Related Ross' investment in BRiC, the Related Ross Foundation's Build Together initiative will work with Boca Raton organizations that expand opportunities for local residents.

Related Ross worked with Adam Beighley of Beighley, Myrick, Udell P.A. as land-use counsel; Holland & Knight's Shawn Amuial and Eric Reissi as transaction counsel; and Joe Dewey and Jessica Hoch as financing counsel.

MGM Designs LLC, managed by auto dealer Ralph J. Gesualdo in Lake Forest, Illinois, sold the 1.97-acre property at 1820 S. Ocean Blvd., Manalapan, to 1820 S. Ocean LLC, managed by Palm Beach-based attorney Maura Ziska. The off-market deal was recorded in September, priced at $30 million. The property has 160 feet of frontage along both the ocean and the Intracoastal Waterway. The lot last traded for $7.05 million in 2015.

Eugene and Judith Reilly sold their Intracoastal waterfront residence at 1033 Waterway Lane, Delray Beach, to Meir Teper, trustee of the Meir Teper Trust. The selling price, recorded in July, was $20 million. Kathleen Hutchison of Hutchison Real Estate Co. represented the sellers. Premier Estate Properties' The Pascal Liguori Estate Group represented the buyer. With six bedrooms and 7,827 square feet, the property previously sold in 2021 for $11.38 million. Teper, with Robert De Niro and chef Nobu Matsuhisa, co-founded the upscale restaurant Nobu, including one at the Eau Resort & Spa in Manalapan.

The 500 Alexander Palm Land Trust sold the 8,281-square-foot Intracoastal waterfront home at 500 E. Alexander Palm Road in the Royal Palm Yacht & Country Club, Boca Raton. The $20 million sale was recorded in September. The buyer is the 500 E. Alexander Land Trust, with Aaron S. Adler as trustee. David Roberts of Royal Palm Properties brokered the deal.

The home last sold new for $25.75 million in 2022. It is situated on a 0.34-acre lot on the Intracoastal Waterway.

The 434 S. Maya Palm Drive Real Estate Trust, with attorney Jeffrey A. Levine as trustee, sold the 9,243-square-foot home at 191 W. Coconut Palm Road in Boca Raton's Royal Palm Yacht & Country Club to the Opalex Living Trust Land Agreement, with Mathieu Laplante as trustee.

The price, recorded in August, was $16.85 million. Natbank provided a $10.7 million mortgage to the buyers, with Mathieu Laplante and his wife, Murphy Filion, signing as borrowers. They are co-founders of the travel insurance firm soNomad. The home was built on the 0.35-acre lot along a canal leading to the Intracoastal Waterway in 2025. David Roberts of Royal Palm Properties represented both sides of the deal.

Pebb Capital secured a $223 million refinancing for Sundy Village, a 7-acre mixed-use campus in downtown Delray Beach. Provided by J.P. Morgan and Hudson Bay Capital, the deal replaces the project's existing construction loan while providing additional capital for tenant improvements. J.P. Morgan, which provided the original construction financing alongside Monroe Capital, is increasing its commitment through the refinancing, while Monroe Capital will conclude its participation in the construction phase.

The financing was arranged by Walker & Dunlop's Institutional Advisory Practice, led by Sean Reimer, Aaron Appel, Jonathan Schwartz, Keith Kurland, Adam Schwartz and Dustin Stolly. Aaron Casden served as the J.P. Morgan banker on the transaction.

Lang Realty was selected for membership in Leading Real Estate Companies of the World. This relationship gives Lang access to a global network of firms and professionals as well as referral opportunities, expanded marketing reach and technology support.

The League of Women Voters of Palm Beach County hosts a Hot Topic Luncheon, "America 250: Is Democracy in Danger? An Historian's Perspective and Predictions for Election Day," with Robert Watson, Ph.D. The luncheon is from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Oct. 21 at Fountains Country Club in Lake Worth Beach.

Watson is distinguished professor of American history and Avron Fogelman Research Professor at Lynn University. Cost to attend is $50. Register by Oct. 14 at lwvpbc.org.

Colony Hotel donates $100,000 in celebration of its birthday

"This initiative reflects our commitment to giving back and saying thank you to the organizations that have helped shape our first century," said Hilary Roche, Colony managing partner.

The bulk of the money went to the Delray Beach Historical Society, which the hotel has long supported, Roche said.

The nonprofit, founded by Nancy G. Brinker in 2018, gives access to screenings and further care throughout Palm Beach, Broward and Martin counties, focusing on women who are uninsured, underinsured or lack access to a regular health care provider.

Visit thepromisefund.org/request-services to learn more about what is offered.

A study published Aug. 27 in JAMA Network Open found that nearly one in three (32%) women ages 21-29 report having never been screened for cervical cancer, a dramatic increase from 2005, when 12.5% of women in the same age group never had been screened.

The study also found significant disparities based on insurance status, race and ethnicity, and education. The percentage of women 21-29 who had never been screened was 41.8% among those without insurance. By race and ethnicity in the same age group, the rates were Asian American women (44.3%), Native American women (38.3%), Hispanic women (37.5%) and non-Hispanic Black women (33.9%).

Nearly 40% of women 21-29 with only a high school education had never been screened, compared with 17% of women with master's or doctoral degrees.

"Cervical cancer is one of the most preventable cancers, and early detection holds the key to survival," said Brinker. "We are alarmed to see screening rates declining so dramatically. … Here in South Florida, nearly 100,000 women are uninsured or do not have a medical home."

Roots and Wings expands free reading program

Roots and Wings, the county's largest nonprofit focused on literacy and teacher recognition, is growing its Project UpLift reading program by five additional schools for the 2026-27 school year, operating in 24 Title 1 elementary schools, the largest footprint in the organization's history.

New to the program are: Banyan Creek Elementary in Delray Beach; Barton Elementary in Lake Worth Beach; Diamond View Elementary in Greenacres; and Forest Park Elementary and Poinciana Elementary in Boynton Beach.

The county faces a significant early-literacy challenge with only 57% of third graders reading at grade level, with proficiency rates even lower at many Title 1 schools.

Project UpLift is a free after-school tutoring program by which participants receive a minimum of 54 hours of focused literacy instruction during the school year. During the 2024-25 school year, 93% of Project UpLift students demonstrated gains on their i-Ready reading assessments, including 96% of enrolled third graders.

"Third grade is the critical year," said Ted Hoskinson, founder and president of Roots and Wings. "Up to that point, a child is learning to read. After that, they're reading to learn, and a student who hasn't gotten there yet can spend the rest of their education trying to catch up.

"Every child deserves the opportunity to become a successful reader," Hoskinson said. "With Project UpLift, we want children to know that they can do this, that people believe in them, and that their future is full of possibilities."

She noted that the wildlife celebrated in the area's public art is now the focus of active protection work. The luncheon also featured the presentation of attorney Rebecca Doane's $20,000 sponsorship gift. Doane & Doane, PA, will be presenting sponsor of Wild About Wildlife's next event, the Nature Renaissance Luncheon at 11 a.m. Oct. 12 at The Ben in downtown West Palm Beach. Richard Louv, author of 'Last Child in the Woods,' is guest speaker. Dr. Denise Herzing, founder and research director of the Wild Dolphin Project, and Jennifer Diaz, vice president of education at the Everglades Foundation, were introduced as WAW's 2027 Conservation Award honorees. They will receive their awards at WAW's Awards Dinner & Gala on Feb. 5 at The Ben. ABOVE: (l-r) Nancy Marshall, Pollack and Diane Bernstein. Photo provided by Capehart Photography

Hurricane Alley finds new home; green markets back for season

Within a week of the emotional announcement detailing the pending closure of Hurricane Alley Raw Bar and Restaurant, owner Kim Kelly said she'd found a new permanent home — just across the street.

Kelly shared the "much happier" news online that the laid-back Boynton Beach seafood restaurant at 529 E. Ocean Ave. had made a deal with owners of Paloma Mexican Restaurant to take over their space. Paloma is closed permanently, with the owners returning to legal careers, Kelly said.

The saga started Aug. 25 on her Facebook page, where Kelly stated that the landlord had set a Sept. 30 deadline for her to vacate the space to make way for The Pierce.

That $105 million mixed-use project, more than five years in the making, had at last been cleared for construction. The first step would be demolition of the Hurricane Alley building.

Kelly would then have to wait months for Affiliated Development, builder of The Pierce, to create a new space for Hurricane Alley north of her current location.

The news caught her by surprise, she said. "I was very emotional. I was sobbing."

But only a few days later, Kelly wrote on her Facebook page that Hurricane Alley had found its "new forever home," and would move into the Paloma Mexican Restaurant.

"It all came together within five days. I got a tip from a good source," she said.

After meeting with the real estate agent, she signed a contract that's a five-year lease with options of up to a 15-year lease for the space at 510 E. Ocean Ave. — on the south side of the street.

The plan, she said, is to make minor renovations and move in, with a grand reopening sometime around Thanksgiving.

Kelly will take the memorabilia from the old place across the street, she said, hoping to re-create the laid-back vibe.

"Everything we had on our walls — we're going to take it all with us."

A lot of the ocean- and fish-themed items hanging on the walls and from the ceiling were gifts from patrons, she said.

"A couple had a stuffed fish in their garage, and brought it to us. We want to keep things like that. Anything that anyone gave us, we want to keep."

But, she said, "It's not going to be easy. We'll have to dismantle the bars, and I'll have to put things in storage. Not everything will fit."

She is looking into a relocation grant from the city. The money would pay for an architect to draw up blueprints for changes.

"There won't be an outside bar, though another bar will be added. There's not a lot to redo. We're working on the flow plan we have here."

The menu items will remain the same, she said, maybe with a few new offerings: "Don't change something that ain't broke."

Prices may go up slightly — that's a sign of the times, Kelly said. Food and beverage costs have climbed even within the last month.

"They're insane," she said. "But we're trying to keep the beer and liquor down."

Labor is the other major cost, and it's a competitive market. "You can't pay somebody $15 an hour. You've got to pay what they're worth.

"Many of them have been with us 10 years. Some, 20 years. For some of them, it's the only job they've known," Kelly said.

Most of the staff have indicated they'll come back to work for her, she said. She has placed a few in other restaurants such as Tim Finnegans Irish Pub in Delray Beach.

"Others will take time off. We have 40 employees. I'm trying to do as much as I can for the employees."

She credits the outpouring of support, including from the city's Community Redevelopment Agency, for encouraging her to stay on the avenue and keep her loyal customers.

Kelly said she's determined to survive.

She had special T-shirts printed to sell that reflect her resilience: "Ride Out the Storm With Us!" All money from the shirt sales will go to her staff.

She said she's grateful to have found the space, and has no plans to relocate elsewhere.

"This is my forever home. I don't plan on going anywhere."

Women and nature take spotlight in local galleries

By Sandra Schulman
ArtsPaper Art Writer

The new art season brings intriguing women painters and photographers, works of great spirituality, Gilded Age jewelry, flocks of painted birds, floral blooms galore and the bounty of art fairs that arrive after the new year.

Japanese block prints, vintage autos and experimental ceramics also make an appearance, so there's art for every taste, budget and lifestyle.

Women and nature feature heavily, with the Norton giving two major shows to female artists, and flora and fauna taking pride of place at both the Boca Raton Museum and Society of the Four Arts.

Breathe the cooler air and dive into the new season.

Norton Museum of Art

In her first museum exhibition, American artist Mimi Plumb will be showing three of her most important series that examine contemporary American culture — climate change, unchecked capitalism, and endless military conflict — in the show Blazing Light.

Over five decades, Plumb has been photographing land overdevelopment, global politics and economic instability as defined by a glaring awareness of global warming and the persistent threats from the Cold War.

Working around San Francisco, Plumb found profound but fleeting beauty of the American West and urban life in gritty black-and-white images. In Boys and Tires, Sears Point (1976), she depicts four young boys clambering around an enormous pile of discarded rubber tires. Will they scale the top of the heap, build a fort, or use them for stick games? For youth, even dirty used rubber is a world of possibility.

Adversely, Couple at Gas Station is odd as can be, bringing the awkward reality of autos and drivers to the slick way that artists like Ed Ruscha depicted gas stations. Here a man in sunglasses and his beehived girlfriend pull away from a Standard gas station, looking bored, hot and restless.

In these two images, Plumb excels at showing how the expectations of youth give way to the drudgery of adult life. (Oct. 31-March 14)

In the second major show, The Whole World Is a Mystery, Gertrude Abercrombie (1909–1977) painted images from her autobiography to proclaim emotional truth as reality. A

Not much to rock your world in a busy concert season

By Bill Meredith
ArtsPaper Music Writer

Much of the quality rock and pop music — especially in live settings — is now purely historic.

Some, like British geriatrics the Rolling Stones, still tour 60 years later, even though they've essentially become a tribute act of themselves.

Current solo stars such as Taylor Swift, Bad Bunny, Beyoncé, Harry Styles, and Adele were spawned in the unfortunate era of The Voice and American Idol, while the biggest groups in the world come from shows like the Eurovision Song Contest and Korean K-pop.

Do they stand up alongside the work of previous pop, soul, folk, funk or progressive rock icons like David Bowie, James Brown, Joni Mitchell, Prince, or Frank Zappa? Not hardly.

Hopefully The Who's Roger Daltrey didn't predict the future when he sang "rock is dead" during its anthemic single "Long Live Rock." But if he was correct, his forgettable side career as a solo artist certainly didn't help to stunt the downward spiral. Rock, at the very least, seems to be on life support.

If the musical question is "What's in a name?," then 5 Finger Death Punch offers a voluminous answer. The groove-conscious metallic quintet has proven that what happens in Vegas — where it formed in 2005 — doesn't necessarily stay there. Vocalist Ivan Moody and guitarist Zoltan Bathory remain from the original lineup, with recent additions in bassist/vocalist Chris Kael, guitarist Andy James and drummer Charlie Engen.

5FDP's current tour also features material from its 10th studio album, 2026's Legacy.

Plenty of daring choices coming to area stages

By Ilana Jael
Contributing Writer

From comfortably recognizable to genuinely adventurous, what South Florida audiences can see on professional stages this year most definitely looks as if it's going to run the gamut.

In other words, alongside the expected mix of Broadway hits and canonical classics, theaters in Palm Beach County and surrounding areas are also offering quite a lot that breaks the mold in their upcoming seasons. For some, that means world premieres of completely new scripts or original adaptations, while other prominent companies will be the first to bring some of America's boldest contemporary plays to life in our region.

Even within the confines of the Kravis Center's On Broadway series — which is by nature constrained to shows popular enough to sustain large-scale national tours — there is at least one odd play along with representatives from all the expected categories. For instance: jukebox musicals

Season Preview: Opera

South Florida companies steer steady ships, including 'H.M.S. Pinafore'

By Greg Stepanich
ArtsPaper Editor

The 2026-27 season in the three major South Florida opera companies wins no awards for breakthrough programming, but as always there will be some particularly notable productions at all three troupes that will be well worth seeking out.

Palm Beach Opera

The West Palm Beach-based company continues its careful, risk-averse approach, scheduling three staples of the repertory.

The season opens with a big bang, with Giuseppe Verdi's Egyptian epic Aïda of 1871. Seen last in the 2005-06 season, this is an opera for big voices and big forces, and the company will need to call on additional chorus members, dancers and orchestral musicians.

Set sometime during the Old Kingdom (2700-2200 B.C.) period in ancient Egypt, the opera concerns the love of Egyptian soldier Radamès for the slave girl Aïda, who is the daughter of Ethiopian king Amonasro.

Verdi's music is masterful throughout, even with its overtones of Meyebeerian French grand opera. Palm Beach Opera has not announced its casts or creatives for the season, but if the voices are strong enough and the production suitably grand, it should be a thrilling night at the opera. (Jan. 29-31, Kravis Center for the Performing Arts)

Gioachino Rossini's The Barber of Seville, by far his best-known opera, is frequently revived hereabouts, and the 1816 bel canto comedy returns for a sixth time to West Palm Beach, having last been seen in 2014.

Anita Hartig and Liparit Avetisyan as Mimì and Rodolfo in La Bohème at Palm Beach Opera this past January. Photo by Bruce Bennett

The story is set in the Spanish city of Seville and concerns the young Rosina, ward of Doctor Bartolo, an older man who wishes to marry her. Through the machinations of the town fix-it, the barber Figaro, Rosina falls in love with the poor student Lindoro, who actually is a nobleman, Count Almaviva, in disguise.

Rossini's famous overture to this opera is one of the most familiar pieces of orchestral music in the literature. (Feb. 26-28 at the Kravis Center)

Closing out the season is a short opera, Ruggero Leoncavallo's 1892 shocker, Pagliacci (Clowns). Leoncavallo's status as a one-hit wonder should not blind operagoers to the considerable skill and appeal of this opera, which is considered part of the verismo tradition, in which Italian composers drew their opera plots from gritty real-life stories.

In a Calabrian town in the 1860s, a troupe of players is led by Canio, a deeply jealous man who suspects his young wife, Nedda, of infidelity. The second act is a play within a play, as the onstage show mirrors reality until the tension boils over, with Canio breaking the fourth wall to demand Nedda tell him who her lover is. She refuses, with dire consequences. Leoncavallo's music is gripping throughout, as is his libretto. (April 2-4, Kravis Center)

pbopera.org; 561-833-7888

Florida Grand Opera

Led since late 2023 by María Todaro, Florida Grand enters its 85th season with three canonical operas.

First up, American soprano Marnie Breckenridge takes the title role in Gaetano Donizetti's 1835 classic Lucia di Lammermoor, with its epic mad scene at the end of Act III.

In the opera, Lucia Ashton is in love with Edgardo Ravenswood, whose family estate was usurped by the Ashtons. Enrico, Lucia's brother, wants to marry off Lucia to Arturo but he has to resort to treachery to lure her away from Edgardo. Lucia and Arturo are married, but the wedding night turns into a bloodbath when Lucia stabs her new husband to death, wanders around in madness, then collapses and dies.

Arturo Chacón-Cruz sings Edgardo, Daniel Scofield is Enrico, and Greer Grimsley sings Raimondo, the chaplain and a confidant to Lucia. The stage director is Neil Robinson. (Nov. 14, 15 and 17, Ziff Ballet Opera House at the Arsht Center in Miami)

Mozart's 1787 story of a dissolute, womanizing nobleman, Don Giovanni, contains some of Mozart's most beloved operatic writing, including its overture and the aria "Là ci darem la mano."

Michael Adams stars as the licentious Giovanni, with Vladyslav Biualskyi as

Leporello. Yulan Piao is Anna, WooYoung Yoon is Ottavio, and Alessandra Di Giorgio is Elvira in the Miami performances, with Catherin Meza taking the role in Fort Lauderdale. Ingrid Kuribayashi is Zerlina, Alex Ivakhin sings Masetto, and George Anguladze is the Commendatore in Miami; Louis Otey sings the role in Fort Lauderdale. The production will be directed by Alek Shrader. (Jan. 30, 31, and Feb. 2, Ziff Ballet Opera House; Feb. 18 and 20, Broward Center)

The final opera of the season will be Verdi's Nabucco, which dates to 1842 and was the composer's third opera. "Nabucco" is short for Nebuchadnezzar, king of the Babylonians and conqueror of the Israelites. At the end of the four-act opera's third act, the Hebrew slaves sing a chorus of longing for their homeland, "Va, pensiero." This mass aria was a sensation at its premiere.

Andrew Menea sings Nabucco, and the Spanish-American soprano Vanessa Goikoetxea is Abigaille. Kate Jackman is Fenena, James Mancuso is Ismaele, and Jongmin Park is Zaccaria. The production will be directed by Thaddeus Strassberger. (April 17, 18 and 20, Ziff House).

fgo.org; 800-741-1010

Sarasota Opera

This is a repertory house like the Metropolitan Opera in New York, in which several productions overlap during the winter season. The company is offering four "Opera Lovers' Weeks" in March during which all four operas in the winter season can be seen over a period of three or four days. Sarasota also presents two other operas in the fall season.

In late October, the company presents Engelbert Humperdinck's lovely Hansel und Gretel, which premiered in 1893. The Sarasota production will be presented in an English translation (as Hansel and Gretel) by Cori Ellison. Kara Morgan is Hansel and Kerrigan Bigelow is Gretel; Lisa Chavez is the Witch. Anthony Barrese conducts a production directed by Felicity Stiverson. (Oct. 30-Nov. 14)

The winter season of four operas opens with Verdi's La Traviata, one of the most popular operas in the world.

Palm Beach County native Virginia Mims stars as Violetta, with Luke Norvell as her Alfredo. The elder Germont is sung by Luke Sutliff in this production directed by Marco Nisticò. Marcello Cormio conducts. (Feb. 6-March 20)

Up next is a first for Sarasota Opera: Gilbert and Sullivan. H.M.S. Pinafore, which took Victorian Britain (and the United States) by storm beginning in 1878, is the topsy-turvy tale of love and class mismatches aboard one of Her Majesty's ships.

David Walton is Ralph, Hanna Brammer is Josephine, and Alissa Anderson is Buttercup, with Hans Tashjian as Sir Joseph, Jake Stamatis as Captain Corcoran and Gabriel Lockheimer Toso as Dick Deadeye. Joseph Spencer IV conducts Arthur Sullivan's durable score, and stage direction is provided by Mark Freiman. (Feb. 13-March 19)

Richard Strauss's one-act Ariadne auf Naxos (1912), which was his follow-up to Der Rosenkavalier and has steadily risen to a repertory piece. It is a fascinating mix of comedy and myth, set in motion by a play-within-a-play Prologue in which the Composer learns that his new opera (Ariadne auf Naxos), because of time constraints before a fireworks show, must be performed simultaneously with a comedia dell'arte program.

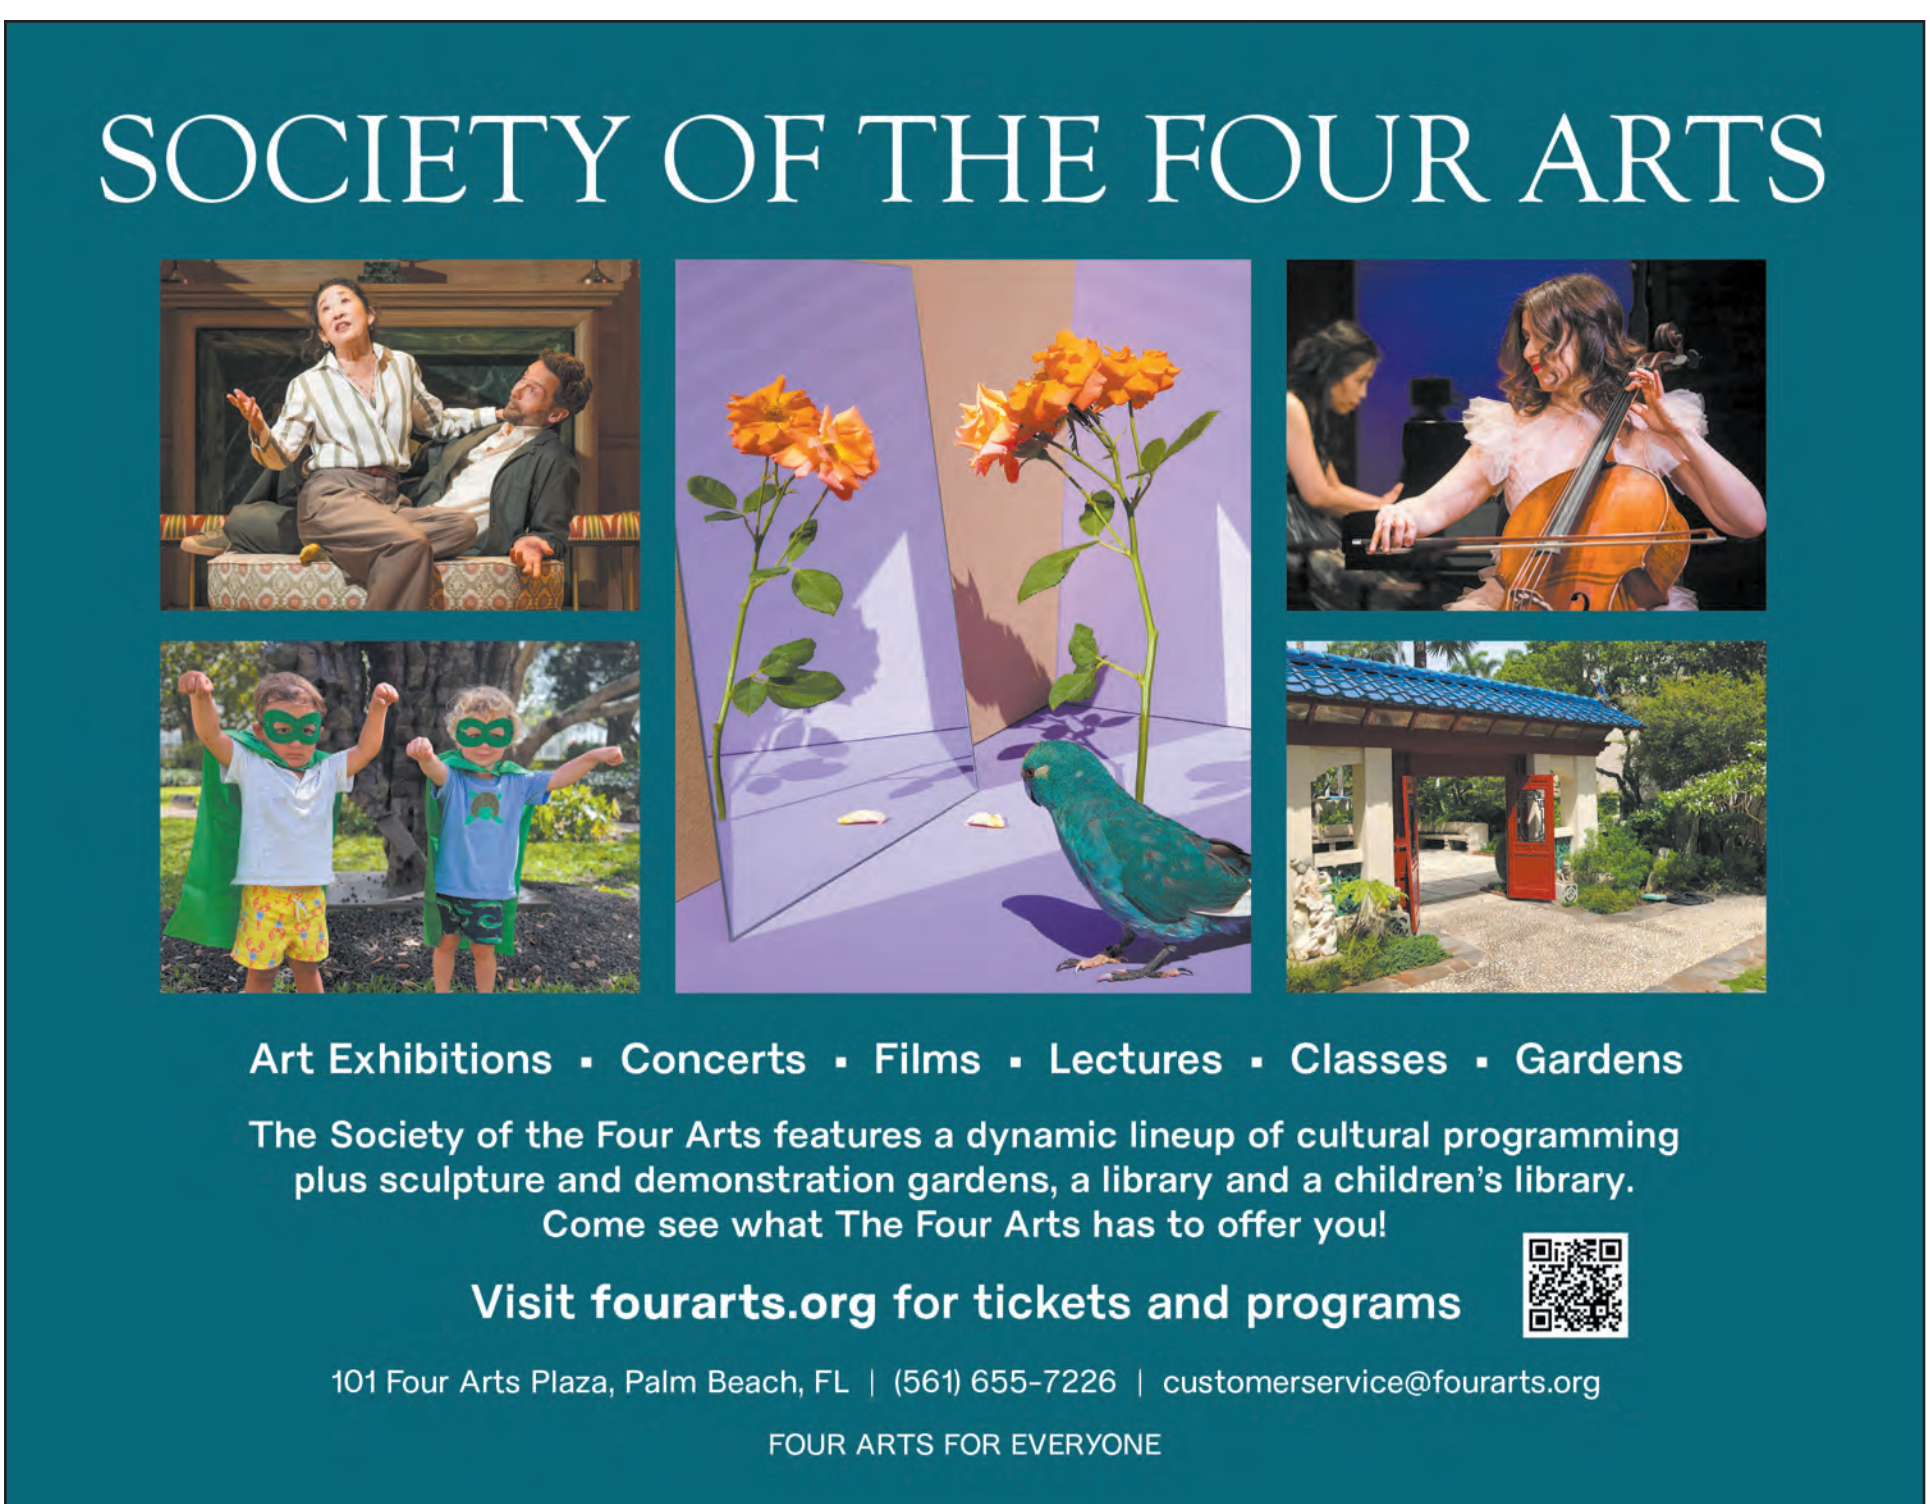

Mary Evelyn Hangley sings Ariadne, with Abigail Raiford as Zerbinetta. The three nymphs are sung by Melanie Spector, Agnese Gallenzi and Emily Harmon; Jeremy Brauner is Bacchus, the Composer is sung by Tessa Fackelmann, the Dancing Master is Dylan Schang and the Music Master is Alexander Boyd. The comedians are Andrew Bearden Brown, David Freides, Youngwang Park and Matthew Cossack. Martha Collins directs, with Jessé Martins leading the music. (Feb. 27-March 13)

The fourth offering marks another first for Sarasota: An opera by the Czech master Leoš Janáček. Jenůfa, premiered in 1904 and later revised, is a disturbing but ultimately hopeful tale of rural Moravian life in which the title character, who is pregnant by Števa, her betrothed, is upset that he does not want to get married quickly.

In a coup for Sarasota, the company has landed Finnish soprano Karita Mattila (who won a Grammy for her performance as Jenůfa under Bernard Haitink) as the Kostelnička. Kathryn Henry will sing Jenůfa, with Victor Starsky as Števa, and Christopher Oglesby as Laca. Katherine M. Carter directs, and David Neely conducts. (March 6-21)

The Master Chorale of South Florida offers its annual holiday program Dec. 12 at St. Gregory's, and the Masterworks Chorus of the Palm Beaches presents its annual reading of Handel's Messiah on Dec. 13 at Benjamin Hall and Dec. 14 at the Royal Poinciana Chapel. German violinist Anne-Sophie Mutter joins the Munich Philharmonic on Feb. 14 at the Kravis for the Brahms Violin Concerto. Also on Feb. 14, the Delray String Quartet is joined by four Lynn Conservatory student musicians for Mendelssohn's Octet at St. Paul's. The Four Arts's three-part celebration of the violin begins Feb. 17 with the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center in music by Tartini, Beethoven and Richard Strauss, accompanied by Finnish pianist Juho Pohjonen; Seraphic Fire presents a concert Feb. 21 at St. Gregory's featuring music by Pärt, Glass and Górecki; the 21st also features music from the Americas by the Symphonic Band of the Palm Beaches at the Duncan Theatre (repeated Feb. 27 at the Eissey Campus Theatre in Palm Beach Gardens). That same day sees violinists Chad Hoopes and Danbi Um in concert for the Four Arts.

The Jupiter String Quartet plays the Duncan Theatre on Feb. 24. On Feb. 25 at the Norton Museum of Art in West Palm Beach, the Chamber Music Society of Palm Beach offers music by Schumann, Brahms and Joachim.

MARCH

On March 1, pianist and composer Conrad Tao leads the UK's Academy of St. Martin in the Fields at the Kravis —he'll play Mozart's Concerto No. 23 and present a new work of his own. Opera tenor James Valenti offers a recital at Glazer Hall on March 6. That's also the day for an afternoon concert of contemporary choral works by the Masterworks Chorus of the Palm Beaches at First Presbyterian Church in North Palm Beach. The London Symphony Orchestra makes a two-day stop at the Kravis led by Antonio Pappano: On March 7, cellist Alisa Weilerstein performs the Elgar Cello Concerto, and on March 8, violinist Maxim Vengerov offers the Violin Concerto of Beethoven.

Israeli mandolinist Avi Avital is in town March 10 for a concert with the Quebec early music group Violons du Roy for the Four Arts, while at the Kravis on March 15, Gerard Schwarz welcomes his cellist son Julian Schwarz as soloist with the Palm Beach Symphony in Strauss's Don Quixote.

Veteran violinist Itzhak Perlman makes his annual Kravis appearance March 16 with his In the Fiddler's House program celebrating the music of Jewish folk life, and the Merz Trio closes out the Classical Café series March 17 at the Duncan. The Chamber Music Society plans string quintets by Beethoven and Dvořák on March 18 at the Kravis with violinist Karen Gomyo joining Society artistic director Arnaud Sussmann, violists Matthew Lipman and Ettore Causa, and cellist Oliver Herbert.

Superstar wattage is on tap March 21 when Chinese pianist Yuja Wang returns to the Kravis in a solo recital with an unusual set of rules: No program announcements and no applause between numbers. That same day at St. Gregory's, Kojiro Umezaki, a standout performer on the shakuhachi, a Japanese bamboo flute, performs one of his own works on a Symphonia program including pieces by Angel Lam, Takuma Itoh and Copland's Appalachian Spring.

APRIL

On April 3-4, The Lynn Philharmonia offers works by Brahms, Haydn and Bartók. American guitarist Sharon Isbin plays Latin masterworks April 5 with Spain's Concerto Málaga at the Kravis. Arnaud Sussman and pianist Orion Weiss team up for a violin recital April 8 at Bethesda-by-the-Sea. The Delray String Quartet performs Schubert's Rosamunde Quartet on April 14 at St. Paul's, and soprano Virginia Mims joins the Lynn Sinfonietta at Lynn for Samuel Barber's Knoxville: Summer of 1915.

The Four Arts season closes April 21 with the Viano String Quartet joined by English pianist Stephen Hough. The 200th anniversary of the death of Beethoven in 1827 is marked April 23 by the Masterworks Chorus at First Presbyterian in North Palm Beach, while The Symphonia ends its season in high Viennese style with two concerts called "Waltzing with Strauss" on April 24 and 25 at The Studio at Mizner Park. Expect Johann Strauss II cosplay by director Alastair Willis in these "New Directions" concerts. The month ends April 28 with violinist Pinchas Zukerman playing Max Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 and a work by the Israeli composer Paul Ben-Haim with the Palm Beach Symphony at the Kravis, and the Chamber Music Society of Palm Beach at the Norton on April 29, with pianist Chelsea Wang joining Sussmann and three other musicians for piano quintets by Dohnányi and Dvořák.

MAY

Conductor Mark Humphreys closes out the Symphonic Band of the Palm Beaches season May 8 at the Duncan and May 16 at the Eissey Campus Theatre with an all-American program of music by Anderson, Bernstein, Sousa and Fillmore. The Delray String Quartet offers Mendelssohn's String Quartet No. 2 on May 16 at St. Paul's, and at St. Gregory's that same day, the Master Chorale of South Florida presents choral works by Whitacre, Norway's Ola Gjeilo and Latvia's Ēriks Ešenvalds. And the whole classical season comes to an end May 23 with the Palm Beach Symphony welcoming Australian violinist Ray Chen to the Kravis for the Sibelius Violin Concerto; also on the bill is Stravinsky's Rite of Spring.

albums, like its 1994 debut (nicknamed the Blue Album). Its signature track, "Buddy Holly," featured singing guitarist Rivers Cuomo name-dropping within a power-pop song structure. Cuomo and drummer Patrick Wilson remain from the original lineup, with guitarist Brian Bell and bassist Scott Shriner. Fans can expect sing-alongs on those hits, plus ample material from Weezer's new self-titled 2026 Gold Album.

7 p.m. Oct. 13 at Amerant Bank Arena, 1 Panther Parkway, Sunrise (954-835-7000, $82-$382)

Def Leppard has been a serviceable, anthemic British rock band since releasing its debut album in 1980. Vocalist Joe Elliott, guitarists Phil Collen and Vivian Campbell, and bassist Rick Savage now team with drummer Rick Allen (who lost an arm in a 1981 car crash and plays on a customized Simmons electronic drum kit) as a nostalgia act nearly 50 years later — but no other band has this made-for-TV-movie plot.

8 p.m. Oct. 15 at Hard Rock Live, 1 Seminole Way, Davie (954-797-5531, $134-$9,099)

Ninety-year-old singing guitarist Buddy Guy has been the godfather of living blues legends since Mississippi-born guitarist/vocalist B.B. King died at 89 in 2015. Guy's 1967 debut album was creatively called Left My Blues in San Francisco to evoke singer Tony Bennett's hit single; his latest release is last year's Ain't Done With the Blues.

7:30 p.m. Oct. 24 at Dreyfoos Hall at the Kravis Center, 701 Okeechobee Blvd., West Palm Beach (561-832-7469, $63.25-$195.50)

Guitarist Martin Barre brings his Plugged in and Ready Tour to the Parker Playhouse on March 24 and the Lyric Theatre on April 4. Photo provided

California band Cake — equal parts rock and funk, and featuring vocalist John McCrea's spoken word, beat poet-delivery — could've only emerged from the '90s by combining the preceding three decades. To wit, the group's breakout song from its 1996 sophomore release, Fashion Nugget, was a cover of the Gloria Gaynor disco hit "I Will Survive."

McCrea and singing multi-instrumentalist Vince DiFiore have been the mainstays, and the vocalist's composition "Never There," from the 1998 album Prolonging the Magic, proved a last hit hurrah. They've been a nostalgia act since, but give them credit — no one else has ever sounded like them.

8 p.m. Oct. 26 at Pompano Beach Amphitheater, 1801 NE 6th St. (561-223-7231, $106-$615)

The odds of legendary Canadian progressive rock trio Rush ever touring again were very slim when drummer Neil Peart died in 2020 from glioblastoma at age 67.

Luckily, lead-singing bassist Geddy Lee and guitarist Alex Lifeson found 43-year-old German drummer Anika Nilles, whose previous experience included touring with guitarist Jeff Beck. Like Peart, Nilles' style is equal parts muscular and fluid, making her the perfect addition. Loren Gold has also been added for touring on keyboards and backing vocals.

7:30 p.m. Nov. 5 and 7 at Hard Rock Live ($320-$12,273)

Blues music has been looking for a singing guitarist to fill the late Stevie Ray Vaughan's shoes for nearly 40 years. Perhaps Christone "Kingfish" Ingram, 27, can become the genre's prime catch. A multi-instrumentalist, Ingram was still in his teens when he recorded his critically acclaimed 2019 debut Kingfish on the heralded blues label Alligator Records. He's released an album every two years since.

7:30 p.m. Nov. 7 at the Culture Room, 3045 N. Federal Highway, Fort Lauderdale (954-564-1074, $54-$162)

And now for something completely different. As part of the Eudomonia Summit, the health and wellness gathering Nov. 5-8 at the Palm Beach Convention Center in West Palm Beach, Seattle-spawned indie folk and rock sextet The Head and the Heart will play at the Meyer Amphitheater.

Forming in 2009, singers and multi-instrumentalists Jonathan Russell and Charity Rose Thielen and guitarist/vocalist Matt Gervais are supported by the rhythmic undercurrent of pianist Kenny Hensley, bassist Chris Zasche, and drummer Tyler Williams. The band's self-titled debut album helped it to be named "Seattle's Best New Band" in 2011 by City Arts Magazine, and its sixth release was last year's Aperture.

8:30 p.m. Nov. 7 at the Meyer Amphitheater, 104 Datura St., West Palm Beach (561-822-1515, $71.76-$164.06)

He looks like actor Johnny Depp in Edward Scissorhands, but guitarist/vocalist Jack White's hands and attitude create different mayhem. From 1997 to 2011, the Detroit native led the White Stripes, his duo with singing drummer and wife Meg White.

White started his solo recording career in 2012, with that year's Blunderbuss. His latest is this year's Frozen Charlotte. His current touring lineup features singing bassist Dominic Davis, singing keyboardist Bobby Emmett and drummer Patrick Keeler.

8 p.m. Nov. 17 and 18 at the Fillmore, 1700 Washington Ave., Miami Beach (305-938-2509, $105-$488.75)

What a concept: a three-piece band playing original blues. GA-20 emerged from Boston in 2018 with an unorthodox, bass-free lineup featuring singing guitarist Cody Nilsen, guitarist Matt Stubbs, and drummer Josh Kiggans in order to fuse blues, country music, and rock.

In those eight years, the trio has averaged more than one album per year. Its latest is the brand-new Blues Now (New West Records).

7 p.m. Nov. 18 at the Funky Biscuit, 303 SE Mizner Blvd., Ste. 59, Boca Raton (561-395-2929, $40.23-$56.24).

Olivia Rodrigo began her career as a child actor in forgettable Disney films before pursuing a recording contract as a teenager. Another conglomerate, Geffen Records, obliged. Three years later, the 23-year-old Rodrigo is one of the faces of modern pop music success in the 2020s: young, female and solo, with three Grammy Awards already after three album releases.

Attendees can expect a throng of teenagers, mostly female, there to hear hit singles like "Drivers License," "Deja Vu," "Good 4 U," "Vampire," "Drop Dead," "The Cure" and "Bad Idea Right?"

7 p.m. Nov. 19 and 20 at Amerant Bank Arena ($340-$3,171).

The 75-year-old artist formerly known as Gordon Matthew Thomas Sumner rose to fame as Sting, front man for The Police, the trio that dominated pop music in 1977-83 with its reggae and world music nuances.

Sting's solo career since includes a few gems (The Dream of the Blue Turtles, 1985; Ten Summoner's Tales, 1993, and the 2009 holiday gem If On a Winter's Night ...), and his singing and playing were near-perfect on The Police's 2007-2008 reunion tour. Since 2024, Sting 3.0 has found him going back to the three-piece format, now with longtime guitarist Dominic Miller and drummer Chris Maas.

Sting

8 p.m. Nov. 25 at Hard Rock Live ($124.80-$1,596.90).

Stadium concerts are less prevalent than they used to be, but the pairing of Usher Raymond and Chris Brown exemplifies how mainstream hip-hop has become. Usher, turning 48 this month, started utilizing his last name after furthering his celebrity through appearing in films, on Broadway, and on the NBC singing competition The Voice. Brown, 37, has followed a similar career arc by straddling R&B and hip-hop. Each will dance more than they vocalize, showcasing the visual element that hip-hop of any variety spotlights.

7 p.m. Dec. 3, 5 and 6 at Hard Rock Stadium, 347 Don Shula Drive, Miami (305-943-8000, $116-$734).

Another younger blues artist, singing guitarist Samantha Fish, 37, headlines a creative multi-artist lineup featuring North Mississippi hill country vocalist/guitarist Cedric Burnside and Brooklyn quartet Daddy Long Legs.

Season Preview: Jazz

Genre acts starting to play it safe, rather than celebrating all that jazz

By Bill Meredith

With occasional exceptions, the 2026-27 season features conservative bookings of actual to covert tributes in order to draw aging audiences seeking nostalgia for what they've already heard — rather than the creativity they've never heard. That trend is currently rampant throughout all forms of music, but it's particularly hurting jazz, especially here in the land where the art form was created.

Black Violin is set to play the fledgling Glazer Hall in Palm Beach. Part classical, part hip-hop and often meeting in the middle at jazz, violinist Kevin Sylvester (who goes by the stage name Kev Marcus) and viola player Wilner Baptiste (Will B.) have emerged as a unique creative force since both attended Dillard High School in Fort Lauderdale. The Grammy Award-nominated duo is likely to perform material from its latest album, Full Circle (Di Versatile Music Group).

4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Oct. 10 at Glazer Hall, 70 Royal Poinciana Way, Palm Beach (561-576-7860, $110-$125); 7 p.m. Oct. 11 at the Au-Rene Theater at the Broward Center for the Performing Arts, 201 SW 5th Ave., Fort Lauderdale (954-462-0222, $23-$151).

Formed 15 years ago by its struggling New York City jazz pianist, Scott Bradlee's Postmodern Jukebox might've been one of the first among the surge of gimmicky tribute acts.

The group has covered Meghan Trainor's "All About That Bass," naturally, but it's really all about that show's vocalists like Catie Turner, Casey Abrams, Haley Reinhart, Joey Cook, Rayvon Owen, Clark Beckham, and Melinda Doolittle. All with attire out of The Great Gatsby.

8 p.m. Oct. 11 at Pompano Beach Amphitheater, 1801 NE 6th St. (561-223-7231, $78-$237)

For a bass player to become the face of modern jazz takes some doing. But Christian McBride with Ursa Major proves that this energetic bassist has always done things right. The 11-time Grammy Award winner, 54 — with more than 400 recording credits — will be joined onstage to perform mostly original compositions, written with tenor saxophonist Nicole Glover, keyboardist Mike King, guitarist Ely Perlman, and drummer Savannah Harris.

7:30 p.m. Oct. 30 at Glazer Hall ($125-$150)

Guitarist and vocalist John Pizzarelli has earned enough bread to avoid tributes, but he's savvy enough to know where his bread gets buttered. Yet his themed Dear Mr. Bennett show, with pianist Isaiah J. Thompson and bassist Mike Karn, is straight from the presenting Gold Coast Jazz Society's playbook. Like the honoree Tony Bennett, Pizzarelli straddles genres with ease.

7 p.m. Nov. 19 at the Lyric Theatre, 59 SW Flagler Ave., Stuart (772-286-7827, $75), 7:45 p.m. Jan. 13 at Broward Center ($82.60)

Perhaps the only band of its kind, Pink Martini gets included in jazz because it might be the genre the collective comes closest to by default. Founded and led by pianist Thomas Lauderdale since 1994, the ensemble offers original compositions, cover tunes and presentations that couldn't have possibly been scripted.

The 2013 album Get Happy featured guests from comedy legend Phyllis Diller to political commentator Ari Shapiro, and Dream a Little Dream (2014) featured the singing Austrian family the Von Trapps, offspring of the singers portrayed in the 1965 film The Sound of Music.

7 p.m. Jan. 17 at the Au-Rene Theater ($47-$176).

Another Gold Coast Jazz Society presentation features veteran keyboardist Bob James, 86, whose serpentine career started when he was discovered by Quincy Jones in 1962.

Playing both acoustic piano and electric keyboards on less contemporary material signals that James might be finishing his career.

7:45 p.m. Feb. 3 at the Amaturo Theater at Broward Center ($82.60)

Year after year, Japanese pianist Yoko Miwa brings her trio back to Delray Beach. Every year, that is, since 2021, entertaining the crowd with her original compositions and creative covers with bassist Will Slater and her husband, drummer Scott Goulding. Her ninth release is the critically acclaimed album Songs of Joy (Ubuntu Music, 2021).

8 and 10 p.m. Feb. 6 at Arts Garage, 94 NE 2nd Ave., Delray Beach (561-450-6357, $60.50-$65.50)

The life of heralded Cuban-American trumpeter Arturo Sandoval reads like a movie script, and with good reason. In 2000, renowned actor Andy Garcia portrayed Sandoval in the HBO dramatic biopic For Love or Country: The Arturo Sandoval Story.

Sandoval, 76, recorded with pianist Chucho Valdes' legendary Cuban jazz group Irakere between 1976 and 1982. His own 40-plus-year recording career includes receiving the Presidential Medal of Freedom from President Barack Obama in 2013, and receiving Kennedy Center Honors in 2024.

8 p.m. April 10 at Dennis C. Moss Cultural Arts Center, 10950 SW 211 St., Miami (786-573-5300, $50-$105).

The leader of the Christian McBride Big Band might not bring back post-bebop, West Coast "cool jazz," but there's no one cooler in the genre today. That's largely because he learned from, and worked with, elder statesmen octogenarian jazz legends in keyboardist Herbie Hancock and guitarist John McLaughlin.

McBride is represented in these season previews with both his youthful group Ursa Major and his self-titled big band, six months and two counties apart. The open-minded bassist's six different groups encompass influences from Art Blakey, Miles Davis and Quincy Jones to James Brown, Charles Mingus and Duke Ellington, and his 18-piece big band combined the power and sophistication of those greats on its Grammy Award-winning (for "Best Large Jazz Ensemble Album") 2011 debut The Good Feeling. McBride has since led feel-good performances through last year's release Without Further Ado, Vol. 1.

8 p.m. May 6 at the Adrienne Arsht Center, 1300 Biscayne Blvd., Miami (305-949-6722, $58.50-$152.10)

Fish is curating her traveling blues-and-beyond "Shake 'Em on Down Tour" for the fourth consecutive year. The Grammy Award-nominated artist's latest studio album is last year's Paper Doll; her most recent release is this year's fiery update, Paper Doll Live, both on Rounder Records.

The Grammy Award-winning Burnside, 48, is the grandson of legendary blues man R.L. Burnside, and carries on both family and blues traditions on his latest recorded homage from 2024, Hill Country Love.

Part blues and part R&B, Daddy Long Legs consists of vocalist, guitarist and harmonica player Brian Hurd, guitarist Murat Akturk, pianist Dave Klein, and drummer Josh Styles, who are likely to play tunes from its latest studio album, Lowdown Ways.

7 p.m. Dec. 5 at the Culture Room ($58.65-$95.56)

Vocalist Johnny Rotten, front man of English punk rock godfathers the Sex Pistols, formed Public Image Ltd. in 1978, aiming to expand the post-punk sound with experimental elements of funk, progressive rock, jazz/fusion and dub music starting with its debut Public Image: First Issue.

Now 70 and no longer Rotten, John Lydon has shifted the group's personnel ever since, sometimes with fascinating results. Its latest album, End of the World (2023), continues the theme of Lydon's "no future for you" lyrics on the Sex Pistols classic "God Save the Queen," with longtime guitarist Lu Edmonds, bassist Scott Firth, and drummer Bruce Smith. Drummer Mark Roberts joins for live tour performances.

7 p.m. March 10 at Revolution Live, 100 SW 3rd Ave., Fort Lauderdale (954-449-1025, $46.70-$50.50)

Singer and flutist Ian Anderson might've been the voice and face of Jethro Tull, but guitarist Martin Barre was the musician who changed the trajectory of the progressive rock band after joining in 1969 and contributing to its second album, Stand Up.

Barre's side career as a solo artist started in the 1990s and has continued since he and Anderson parted ways 15 years ago. Yet he's paid tribute to his former band through recordings and concerts since, and "The Plugged In and Ready 2027 Tour" certainly hints at his stinging "Barre chords" and solos on Tull classics like "Cross-Eyed Mary" and "Locomotive Breath."

7:30 p.m. March 24 at Wells Hall at the Parker Playhouse, 707 NE 8th St., Fort Lauderdale (954-462-0222, $46.61-$192); 5 and 7 p.m. April 4 at the Lyric Theatre, 59 SW Flagler Ave., Stuart (772-286-7827, $65)

As part of the Arsht Center's Jazz Roots series, the Elvin Bishop and Charlie Musselwhite Duo definitely qualifies as more roots than jazz. Guitarist/vocalist Bishop, who'll turn 84 this month, started his blues career with harmonica ace Paul Butterfield in 1963 before delving into funk and pop music. The singing guitarist teamed with singing harmonica legend Musselwhite for the 2020 album 100 Years of the Blues. With a recording career that started in 1967 and is bookended by his 2025 release Look Out Highway, Musselwhite has become a Grammy Award-winning blues legend.

Perhaps only one band included here represents equal parts original, cover, and tribute act to itself. Psychedelic rock quartet Vanilla Fudge formed as a cover band in Long Island, N.Y., in 1966, playing what drummer/vocalist Carmine Appice, now based in Lake Worth Beach, called "production numbers" in an ArtsPaper interview last year.

The group's original lineup remains intact, with the exception of singing bassist Tim Bogert (1944-2021): vocalist/keyboardist Mark Stein, guitarist/vocalist Vince Martell, and longtime replacement bassist/vocalist Pete Bremy. Led Zeppelin opened for them in 1968, and fans can expect originals and those covers — plus ones from the quartet's latest release, the 2007 Zeppelin cover album Out Through the In Door. Appice also appears at the Boca Black Box with his rock act Cactus, on Dec. 11.

Season Preview: Dance

Diversity, drama, depth: Local dance programs to offer it all

What goes in your cart when you are browsing? Is it the same thing you got last time or is it something different? Maybe something catches your eye and you take the risk and drop it into your shopping cart. Well, in this season's lineup for dance in Palm Beach County, there is something to like for everyone.

The Kravis Center for the Performing Arts has restocked its dance offerings this season with some exciting picks, while Miami City Ballet has maintained its limited programming, appearing only briefly at the Kravis Center and a runout at Glazer Hall. Meanwhile, the Duncan Theatre has expanded its popular modern dance series.

For the dance lover, there is a nice variety from which to choose. Put those favorites in your shopping cart — but for a little thrill be sure to add something a little out of your comfort zone.

Miami City Ballet

Miami City Ballet, always a big attraction, is presenting the inaugural season of the company's new artistic director, Gonzalo Garcia — five different programs at five venues (including two in New York City) that will spread out over almost eight months.

It is an impressive offering, but the lineup for the Kravis is slim once again. Only two programs are being offered, and both are late in the season, when many may have already left Palm Beach County.

Icons and Innovators, the first program at the Kravis, is scheduled for two performances April 17 and one on April 18. The program pairs the neoclassicism of the iconic George Balanchine with two of today's ballet choreographers who are making a mark for themselves — Tiler Peck, a well-known New York City ballerina and emerging choreographer, and Justin Peck, a former New York City Ballet dancer who currently serves as its resident choreographer.

The program opens with Balanchine's Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 2, created in 1941 as an homage to the spectacle and grandeur of the Russian Imperial ballet tradition. The newest work on the program will be a commissioned world premiere by Tiler Peck that will mark her first collaboration with Miami City Ballet.

Rounding out the program is Rodeo: Four Dance Episodes, choreographed by Justin Peck, which premiered in 2015 and was last seen at the Kravis in 2020. Peck, who is no relation to Tiler Peck, reimagined Aaron Copland's iconic Americana score through the lens of contemporary ballet, creating a high-energy and athletic ensemble work for the cast, which is dominated by men. This work is considered by many to be one of Peck's most thrilling ballets as it focuses on pure movement without the original rodeo interpretation.

MCB's full-length adaptation of Swan Lake will return to the Kravis this season. Set by the renowned choreographer Alexei Ratmansky, the resplendent production of this famous romantic tragedy hosts a large cast of more than 50 dancers, rich costumes and gorgeous sets and is set to a sweeping score by Tchaikovsky that will be performed live by the Miami City Ballet Orchestra. Performances are May 7-9.

To see any of the other MCB programs, you will have to travel to Fort Lauderdale and/or Miami — except for one other performance in Palm Beach. Glazer Hall, on the site of the former Royal Poinciana Playhouse, will present Miami City Ballet in a program called American Odyssey on Nov. 21, featuring two Balanchine works — Allegro Brillante and the "Rubies" section of Jewels — and a New World Symphony collaboration called Choreographic Concerto, featuring works by five choreographers paired with five contemporary American composers (Kevin Puts, Jennifer Higdon, Carlos Simon, Michael Abels and Sarah Kirkland Snider). Tickets are steep at $125-$150, but the show offers Palm Beach County another chance to see this company.

The company's 2026-27 season formally opens with American Rhythms, a mixed bill that highlights Allegro Brillante with a world premiere by Miami-born, Tony Award-winning choreographer and former MCB Principal Dancer Patricia Delgado (who is married to Justin Peck) and concludes with the company premiere of Jerome Robbins's N.Y. Export: Opus Jazz. The American Rhythms program will be shown at the Arsht Center in Miami on Oct. 16-18 and at the Broward Center in Fort Lauderdale on Oct. 24-25.

MCB will then celebrate the holidays with a plethora of performances of Balanchine's setting of The Nutcracker at the Arsht Center, Dec. 11-27. That will be followed by the MCB debut of Christopher Wheeldon's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, which will be presented at the Arsht Center on Feb. 25-March 7 and at the Broward Center March 18-21.

Kravis Center

The Kravis Center for the Performing Arts has its own strong and diverse dance lineup for the 2026-27 season, starting with the return of the groundbreaking street dance company of Rennie Harris Puremovement American Street Dance Theater on Nov. 7 and 8 at the Rinker Playhouse.

Choreographer Harris believes hip-hop culture can help bridge racial, religious and economic divisions, and his vibrant ensemble brings a new style of social dance to the concert that challenges expectations of hip-hop and street dance.

Then on Nov. 18 in Dreyfoos Hall, the fabulous, illusionistic dance company Momix returns to our area with its full-evening work Botanica. This is a surreal, visual journey through nature's ever-changing imagery and rhythms. The combination of the energy and athleticism of the company's world-class dancers, an eclectic score that spans from the song of a bird to Vivaldi, together with lush cinematic projections, whimsical puppetry and gravity-defying props, makes Botanica a memorable immersive experience.

The Italian performing arts company NoGravity Theatre, founded by Emiliano Pellisari and directed in collaboration with lead dancer Mariana Porceddu, will present Divine Comedy Reloaded, a production that also pushes the boundaries of theatrical illusion as mirror images of the dancers interact with their stage action. The performance will be held at Dreyfoos Hall on Jan. 23.

The one-night-only performances continue Feb. 13 at Dreyfoos Hall with one of the most acclaimed dance companies in the world, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. This not-to-be-missed company has performed in more than 70 countries on six continents and has a repertoire of more than 300 works. The program is sure to include new works by some of today's most exciting and upwardly mobile contemporary choreographers as well as celebrated works by founder Alvin Ailey.

Closing out the season March 27 for the Kravis dance lineup, Camille A. Brown and Dancers will perform I AM. For more than 10 years, Brown has been racking up a long list of accolades for her work on Broadway including an Obie Award and five Tony Award nominations. The NYC-based dance company features Brown's whirlwind choreography, which is a blend of modern, hip-hop, African, tap, and social dance. I AM was selected as a 2025 New York Times Critics' Pick for breaking boundaries and taking African diasporic dance forms to new heights.

Duncan Theatre

The Duncan Theatre, which hosts the well-attended Friday and Saturday Modern Dance Series at Palm Beach State College in Lake Worth, has been a cornerstone of the dance season in Palm Beach County for ages. Its loyal audience returns year after year, avidly participates in the after-performance talk-backs and can be seen attending many other dance events.

The series will begin on Jan. 29 and 30 with the Trinity Irish Dance Company, a uniquely Irish-American dance troupe that was founded in 1990 by Mark Howard, whose pioneering work as a choreographer significantly changed the direction and scope of Irish dance. These new avenues of artistic freedom ignited the traditional art form of Irish step dance into a phenomenon that directly led to popular commercial productions such as Riverdance.

Then on March 5 and 6, in celebration of the 150th anniversary of Maurice Ravel's birth, Rioult Dance will present an evening dedicated to the ballet music of the visionary French composer who has deeply inspired choreographer Pascal Rioult throughout his career. Featured in the program are three works by Rioult set to Ravel's iconic scores — Boléro, Wien (Vienna) and a new creation set to Daphnis et Chloé.

Parsons Dance is a popular contemporary American dance company that was founded in 1985 by Artistic Director David Parsons and Tony Award-winning lighting designer Howell Binkley. Known for its high-energy, athletic, and joyful style, the company has performed in more than 445 cities, 30 countries, and five continents. Parsons Dance has been a deservedly popular item on the menu at the Duncan Theatre, as this will be the fourth time since 2018 that it has been on the series. The shows are set for March 19-20.

ABT Studio Company, the junior company of American Ballet Theatre, which features rising stars of the ballet world between the ages of 16 and 21, will close the Duncan Theatre's season April 2-3. The company prepares these outstanding young dancers, who hail from across the globe, to enter the professional world of ballet.

Ballet Palm Beach

This professional ballet company located in Palm Beach Gardens is celebrating its 25th anniversary season with an ambitious lineup of programs inspired by literary masterpieces, family favorites and world premieres. This season also marks founding Artistic and Executive Director Colleen Smith's 50 years of work in professional ballet for Palm Beach County.

NoGravity Theatre will perform Divine Comedy Reloaded on Jan. 23 at Dreyfoos Hall. Photo provided by NoGravity

The troupe's season launches Oct. 22-24 at the Rinker Playhouse at the Kravis with Mary Shelley's Frankenstein. This is the newest of the long collection of Smith's "page-to-stage" original works.

Then on Dec. 4-6 at Dreyfoos Hall at the Kravis, Ballet Palm Beach presents its version of Tchaikovsky's The Nutcracker, which has become a tradition for the company.

On March 5-7 at the Rinker Playhouse, the company will present a poignant new work that tells the story of the tragic young diarist Anne Frank, a victim of the Nazis in World War II. Anne Frank showcases the dangers of hatred and prejudice while inspiring kindness, understanding, and hope in the modern world. This program gets support from the Palm Beach Center to Combat Antisemitism and Hatred.

Next up is everyone's favorite, the classic rags-to-riches tale of Cinderella. Ballet Palm Beach's production of Cinderella, which is filled with conniving stepsisters, a fairy godmother and of course, a handsome prince, and is set to a lush score by Russian composer Sergei Prokofiev, is a wonderful story ballet for audiences of all ages. It will be presented April 9-11 at the Rinker Playhouse.

And finally on June 26 at Dreyfoos Hall, a joyful tale of romantic mayhem will unfold in A Midsummer Night's Dream. Here, magic and mischief take center stage where a cheeky sprite sets out to confuse lovers and set fairies feuding in the moonlight of a forest.

Boca Ballet Theatre

Once again, Boca Ballet will be the earliest to launch the holiday season with its full-length production of the Edith and Martin Stein Family Foundation's The Nutcracker on Nov. 27, 28 and 29.

Choreographed by company founder Dan Guin, the performances at the Olympic Heights Performing Arts Theater in Boca Raton are always well-attended.

On April 17-18, the company presents Romeo and Juliet. Shakespeare's tragic story of two star-crossed lovers from feuding families in Verona is set to a classic score by Sergei Prokofiev. Boca Ballet Theatre's final offering for the season is set for July 31-Aug. 1 with a production of Petipa's La Bayadère, presented by dancers taking part in Boca Ballet's five-week summer intensive, The Directors' Summer. The program will bring six renowned dance leaders to work with the 36 young dancers.

HARID Conservatory

The Harid Conservatory, the Boca Raton-based tuition-free professional training school for gifted young dancers from around the world, will present two programs.

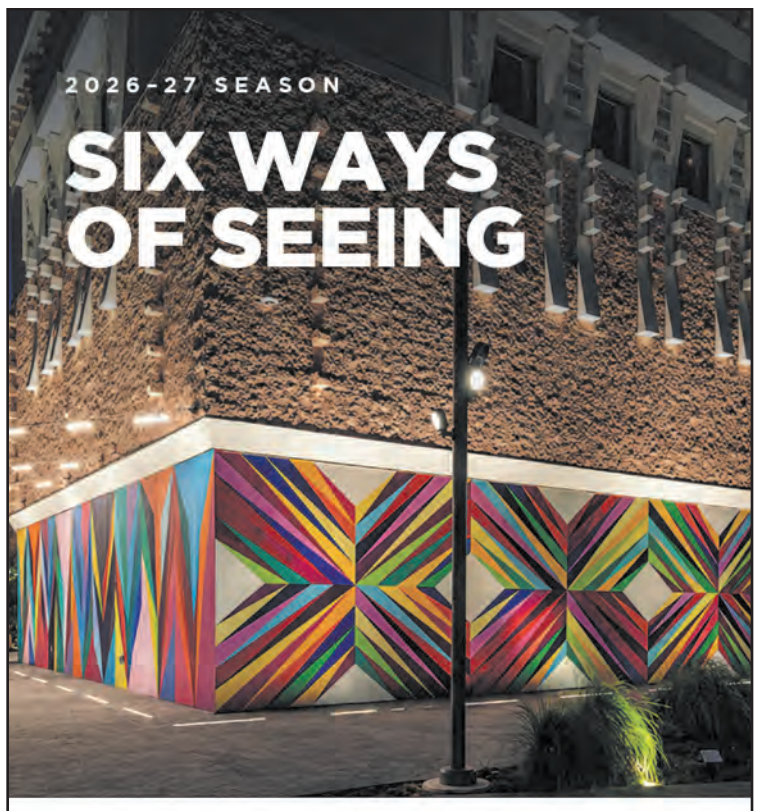

The 2026 Winter Performances are scheduled for Dec. 18-20. Just in time for the holidays, the festive program will consist of divertissements from Act II of The Nutcracker, as well as other classical ballets, modern dances and character dances.

The 2027 Spring Performances, which are traditionally a mix of classical and contemporary ballets highlighting HARID's graduating Class of 2027, will be performed May 21-23.

Both programs will be at the Countess de Hoernle Theatre on the campus of Spanish River High School in Boca Raton.

(Alicia Keys' Hell's Kitchen, April 20-25), revivals of classics (The Sound of Music, Feb. 16-21), and adaptations of beloved films (Dirty Dancing, Oct. 28-Nov. 1, Monty Python's Spamalot, Nov. 10-15) books (Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas!, Dec. 22-27, The Great Gatsby, Jan. 6-10), and other cultural miscellany (Boop! the Musical, April 6-11).

But yes, even here, you'll also find something truly wild in Oh, Mary! (May 11-16), a gleefully deranged Tony-winning comedy by Cole Escola that turns titular character Mary Todd Lincoln into a sex-crazed cabaret singer wannabe who will be played in this production by a man in drag.

A few miles down the road at Palm Beach Dramaworks, you'll probably find fewer titles that you recognize in the mix — but potentially even more to pique your interest if you happen to prefer ambitious storytelling to Broadway-style song-and-dance. Having well-earned a reputation as one of the most artistically formidable producing theaters in Palm Beach County, Dramaworks seems to be becoming more and more willing to experiment with less accessible and more offbeat shows, to the extent that each of the six plays slated for its 2026-2027 seasons seems to hail from a completely different aesthetic universe.

In two world premieres, we get Alba, Alejandro Rodriguez's Miami retelling of La Casa de Bernarda Alba (Oct. 9-26), and Provenance, a play by Jennifer Maisel that follows a portrait through Nazi Germany (Dec. 11-27). Of two established straight plays, one interrogates slavery — Ben Butler (May 21-June 6) — and the other is Pinter at peak absurdism, with The Birthday Party (April 2-18). Dramaworks also makes a rare turn to musicals, with Adam Guettel's The Light in the Piazza (Feb. 5-21) a production originally planned for the 2020-21 season that had to be shelved for the COVID-19 pandemic. Also planned is a limited engagement musical show from a visiting legend, Hershey Felder: The Piano and Me (Oct. 30-Nov. 22).

Moving north to the Maltz Jupiter Theatre, also known for its professionalism and high production values, we get a slightly more grounded season that comes with just enough suspense and sparkle to set it apart. Orphans, subtitled "A Story of Second Chances" and playing from Oct. 27 to Nov. 8, is a dark comedy that uses a kidnapping gone wrong to explore the connection between its titular two brothers.

Then, Ain't Misbehavin' will give five "powerhouse performers" the chance to bring Fats Waller's music to life in a "high-energy nightclub celebration" from Dec. 1 to Dec. 13. Afterward, Jerry Herman's La Cage Aux Folles (Jan. 5-24) will take up the mantle as a story set in a "glittering St. Tropez nightclub." From there, "comic chaos" erupts as a gay couple faces pressure to hide the truth of their identities, an energy encapsulated in the show's breakout number "I Am What I Am." The Maltz's main stage season finishes up with Wait Until Dark, running from Feb. 9 to Feb. 21, Frederick Knott's 1966 thriller (made into a 1967 Audrey Hepburn film) about a blind woman engaged in a "deadly game of deception" with dangerous criminals.

1001 E Indiantown Rd, Jupiter. jupitertheatre.org; 561-575-2223

Farther south, in Boca Raton, the cast list alone likely cements The Wick Theatre's Young Frankenstein as a can't-miss for theatergoers familiar with the actors in question: Aaron Atkinson as Frederick Frankenstein, Corey Vega as Igor, Leah Sessa as Elizabeth, Katie DeRosa Tango as Inga, Troy Stanley as The Monster, Britte Hammeke as Frau Blücher, and Shane Tanner as Inspector Kemp and the Hermit. Perfectly timed for the Halloween season, the show also offers "madcap humor, spectacular production numbers, and unforgettable songs" from Oct. 8-Nov. 1.

The Wick's website doesn't yet feature who's who lists for their four upcoming shows, but all have plenty of potential to shine if the casts assembled are similarly high caliber. You can "Consider Yourself" invited to Oliver!, which will run from Nov. 19-Dec. 20, as well as to Bullets Over Broadway, a jazz-infused Broadway musical based on the film by Woody Allen which will play Jan. 14-Feb. 14.

If neither of those shows jibe with your vibe, perhaps you'd prefer climbing the corporate ladder with J. Pierrepont Finch in Frank Loesser's How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (March 4-28) or coming of age with Jo March in a heartfelt musical adaptation of Louisa May Alcott's Little Women (April 22–May 16). And that's all for the Wick's mainstage, though it's worth keeping an eye on the concerts and other engagements that tend to spring up in its elegant space aside from these full productions.

Also in Boca is Theatre Lab, a Florida Atlantic University-based company that has established a distinct artistic identity in the Palm Beaches through a defining focus on new plays. Accordingly, the remainder of its main-stage season will feature the world premiere of two new plays and the Florida premiere of another, following yet another world premiere of its September season opener Baker Street Beginnings.

But next up for the lab this year is, basically, a theatrical three-for-one in Joanna Castle Miller's Bad Faith trilogy of solo plays, which are conceptually united by a shared focus on faith, identity, and finding the courage to change. Last year, Inferna and Conversa, the first two shows of the trilogy, made their world premieres at Theatre Lab. After the third, Virginia, follows suit with its premiere Dec. 6, it will play in repertory with reimagined versions of the prior plays until Dec. 20, giving audiences the chance to see all three over the course of the month, or, on Dec. 20 itself, in a single day.

Theatre Lab's final two productions aren't as closely linked, but share a focus on the theatrical retelling of real-life histories and a connection to the World War II era. Alix Sobler's Sheltered (Jan. 23-Feb. 7), receiving its Florida premiere, follows a Jewish-American couple who enter Nazi-occupied Europe in 1939 to rescue 40 children, only to discover that even an act of extraordinary courage can carry complicated consequences. Ken Weitzman's world-premiere Recognition (April 10-25), meanwhile, centers on pioneering codebreaker Elizebeth Smith Friedman, whose work helped influence the outcomes of both world wars even as her contributions largely disappeared from public memory.

Marleen Forkas Studio One Theatre, Florida Atlantic University, 777 Glades Road, Boca Raton. fau.edu/theatrelab; 561-297-6124

Before we leave Boca, there are two smaller companies in the area whose upcoming seasons are worth mentioning. The first of these, West Boca Theatre Company, produces out of the Levis JCC Sandler Center and has assembled an exciting roster of plays that have prominent Jewish themes: *Summer, 1976 (*Dec. 9-20), *Crossing Delancey (*Jan. 13-30), One Summer in Brooklyn (Feb. 24-March 13), and *The Chosen (*March 28-April 10).

12811 Glades Road, Boca Raton. southfloridatheatre.org; 561-672-2066

Then there's Boca Stage, a now-nomadic company with one production coming up at the Boca Black Box in October and two more scheduled at the Willow Theatre later this season.

The first of these, Murder Ballad, is a "dark sexy rock musical about love, obsession, and betrayal," conveniently scheduled from Oct. 26-31 to offer theatergoers another Halloween pick. From there, the season actually only gets darker with A Human Being Died That Night (Dec. 4-20, Willow Theatre), which tells the story of a South African psychologist's prison interviews with an apartheid-era assassin. Now and Then, taking the last slot in the mini-season at the Willow from Feb. 12-21, is a comparably light-hearted dramedy with a fun supernatural twist.

Which leaves only a couple stray Palm Beach productions. If Disney's your thing, keep an eye out for Entr'Acte Theatrix's upcoming production of Mary Poppins, which will play from Nov. 6–22 at the William G. Skaff Center in West Palm Beach. And new Jupiter company Sticking Place Theatre Collective will present the world premiere of co-founder Matthew Dickinson's Ouroboros at the Lighthouse Theater this Jan. 8-9, to be followed by a production of The 39 Steps that will play there from March 12-14.

And if you are willing to venture beyond? Two key Miami companies have offerings interesting enough to be worth the drive.

First stop: Zoetic Stage, currently producing at Miami's Adrienne Arsht Center and offering a four-show season consisting of three notable contemporary plays in God of Carnage (Nov. 5-22), The Inheritance, Part Two (Jan. 7-24) and John Proctor Is the Villain (April 29-May 16) — plus one 1970s musical I assume they threw in for the fun of it, in Stephen Schwartz's Pippin (March 11-April 4).

1300 Biscayne Blvd, Miami. zoeticstage.org; 305-949-6722

GableStage's upcoming season feels worth spending more time on as an envelope-pushing departure from the company's more conventional roots. The company will be tackling climate change (Weather Girl, through Oct. 18), art world corruption (True Art, Nov. 20-Dec. 20), a playwright's unraveling of 30 years of family history (We Had a World, Jan. 22-Feb. 14), the fight for women's rights (Liberation, March 19-April 18), and a fourth-wall-breaking blend of poetry, music and ritual (littleboy/littleman, May 14-June 13).

Incorporating an impressively diverse array of perspectives, these picks clearly illustrate the increasingly distinct sensibilities of GableStage's current artistic director, Bari Newport. And taken together, their vibe is so strongly anti-establishment that it feels almost confrontational — which definitely isn't a criticism.

Though if you'd rather catch every silly musical that comes to town than spend your season sitting through surrealist takes on systemic issues — well, I can't exactly judge you for that either. What does feel somewhat inarguable, though, is that these are pretty strange times, which is perhaps what makes even the strangest shows feel completely appropriate.

In times like these — and especially here in Florida, where funding for the arts remains unusually precarious — please keep choosing the theater.

Season Preview: Community Theater

Lake Worth, Delray playhouses concentrate on crowd-pleasers

By Ilana Jael
Contributing Writer

If Palm Beach County's two major community theaters seem to be leaning toward proven crowd-pleasers with broad appeal in their mainstage offerings for 2026-27, there are a few exciting twists within the slate of familiar titles.

Within those constraints, the Lake Worth Playhouse is serving up a surprisingly eclectic mix of plays and musicals via its five-show mainstage roster, and will be heading into its season with a much stronger financial footing than at this time last year, thanks to a recent $1 million anonymous gift.

Already, the Playhouse got things off to a strong start this July with its summer musical In The Heights, Lin-Manuel Miranda's rousing ensemble tour de force.

But it will be starting off the season proper on a much more intimate scale with a production of William Finn and James Lapine's Falsettos (Oct. 2-18). This critically acclaimed musical is a challenging choice in terms of subject matter given its centering of queer characters and emotionally intense themes.

But theatergoers need only wait until the second scheduled production for some far lighter fare in Ken Ludwig's The Game's Afoot (Nov. 20-Dec. 6). This whodunit smartly plays to audience appetite for seasonally appropriate shows around the holidays and for murder mysteries year-round.

The cast of In the Heights, which ran in July at the Lake Worth Playhouse. Photo provided Hopkins Productions

The year 2027 gets a kick-line kick-off with A Chorus Line, the biggest name show in the bunch and the one with the longest list of accolades. Playing Jan. 15-31, this 1975 Marvin Hamlisch-Michael Bennett musical has been reaching enthusiastic audiences for more than 50 years.

Next up is Neil Simon's *Broadway Bound (*Feb. 26-March 14), the third and final chapter in the playwrights' "Eugene" trilogy.

Last but not least, the season will conclude on an uplifting note with a production of Come From Away, a 2017 Broadway hit about how a Newfoundland town welcomed U.S. airplane passengers who had been stranded by the events of Sept. 11, 2001. A popular pick around the country this year on the 25th anniversary of the tragedy, this timely show will run April 9-25 and celebrate resilience by focusing on the connections that came in its wake.

Besides these core offerings, the Playhouse will have eclectic options via various pop-up and traveling engagements and a three-show black box series presented in its intimate Stonzek Studio space, which is otherwise used for independent films.

713 Lake Ave., Lake Worth Beach; lakeworthplayhouse.org; 561-586-6410

Meanwhile, the first thing that jumped out about the Delray Beach Playhouse's mainstage lineup is that all four shows are theatrical adaptations of stories that cinephiles likely have seen onscreen.

In the case of season opener *Hairspray (*Nov. 20-Dec. 13), you might recognize the material from either the 1988 John Waters film that inspired the 2002 musical or from the 2007 movie-musical adaptation of that which followed. It's a goofy, upbeat comedy that touches on some real issues.

Groundhog Day is a lesser-known 2016 musical adaptation of the 1993 Bill Murray film, with music and lyrics by Tim Minchin. Since theatergoers presumably lack the main character's capacity to relive the same day over and over, make sure to catch it in its window of Jan. 29-Feb. 21.

Next up is a show with a local pedigree. Boynton Beach Club: The Musical (March 19-April 11) is based on the Susan Seidelman film from 2006, with music by Ned Ginsburg and lyrics by Michael Colby, which premiered in 2017. Sure to strike a chord with the snowbird crowd, this poignant comedy follows a cohort of seniors who turn their bereavement support group into a dating pool.

Shawshank Redemption, the only straight play in the bunch, will close out the season May 14-30, sharing as its source material the Stephen King novella that also inspired the film of the same name.

The Playhouse will also offer plenty of other events, including an extensive "Feelin' Groovy" tribute concert series, featuring talented artists performing the music of legends such as Carly Simon, Paul McCartney, and The Monkees. Plus, the Playhouse will bring quite a few bona fide stars to the stage in the continuation of the Best of Broadway Cabaret series, notably including Andrea McArdle, Julie Benko, and Brent Barrett.

Season Preview: Broward and Miami-Dade Art

Exhibits offer challenges, celebrations from Basquiat to Nevelson

By Jan Engoren
ArtsPaper Art Writer

South Florida's museums in Broward and Miami-Dade counties are opening their doors to a season rich in creativity and topical conversation.

From Joel Meyerowitz's Aftermath, marking the 25th anniversary of Sept. 11, and the monumental Frozen Gestures installation, both at the NSU Art Museum in downtown Fort Lauderdale; to Jean-Michel Basquiat at the Pérez Art Museum and the quirky, avant-garde Museum of Graffiti in Miami; the South Florida art scene promises a season that mixes tradition with innovation and art from around the world.

And that's all before Art Basel and Art Miami touch down during Miami Art Week, Nov. 30 to Dec. 6.

Julian (2014), by Urs Fischer, is featured in the Frozen Gestures exhibit, which opens Nov. 15 at the NSU Art Museum in Fort Lauderdale. Photo provided

NSU Art Museum

Christo and Jeanne-Claude's Surrounded Islands*: This installation, in which 11 Biscayne Bay islands were wrapped in 6.5 million square feet of floating pink polypropylene, put Miami on the map in May 1983, and since 2025, NSU Art Museum has become its home, with over 43 preparatory drawings and collages created by Christo, as well as photographs and photo murals, engineering and environmental surveys, correspondence and original sections of the famed pink fabric. (through March 14)

Joel Meyerowitz: Aftermath*: Marking the 25th anniversary of 9/11, the exhibition features 28 large-scale color photographs by Meyerowitz of the World Trade Center in the aftermath of that day. Meyerowitz was the only photographer granted continuous artistic access to the site. His photographs document Ground Zero's transformation over a nine-month period from a place of total devastation to cleared bedrock.

The exhibit is presented as an elegy to the thousands of people who lost their lives and loved ones on that day, while also honoring survivors and first responders who participated in rescue and recovery efforts. (through Feb. 14)

Frozen Gestures: The monumental exhibition focuses on the expressive characteristics of sculpture from abstract expressionism to today (in contrast to minimalism). The artists in this exhibition capture extreme physical states or seemingly suspend molten and malleable materials at the moment of their creation, resulting in transformations that contradict the enduring properties of sculpture.

Included are works by Lynda Bengalis, Willem de Kooning, John Chamberlain, Teresita Fernandez, Urs Fischer, Roy Lichtenstein, Elizabeth Murray, Will Ryman, Julian Schnabel, David Smith, Frank Stella, Jean Tinguely, Franz West, Rachel Whiteread, and Kennedy Yanko, among others. (Nov. 15-April 11)

Other exhibits include Wifredo Lam's Legacy (through March 14) and A Backward Glance: Highlights from the William J. Glackens Collection (through Feb. 27).

Museum of Graffiti

Who Authorized This?*: The Wynwood-based museum, the only one in the world devoted to the art of graffiti, hosts this exhibit by the prominent Miami graffiti artist known as Disem 305. The title of the exhibit, which echoes the question he repeatedly has heard over 25 years of creating graffiti art in Miami, asks viewers to consider the assumptions that go with authority, and how they might have affected them. (No closing date)

El Tiguere: The artist JonOne (born John Andrew Perello) began as a graffiti writer on trains in Harlem before becoming a painter following in the tradition of drip artists such as Jackson Pollock. JonOne's exhibit uses a Dominican expression for "grit and resilience" to mark his rise from modest beginnings to an international art career. (No closing date)

In December, the museum will showcase the graffiti artist LA II (Angel Ortiz), a

Pérez Art Museum Miami (PAMM)

Basquiat: Figures, Signs, Symbols: The exhibit from the Kenneth C. Griffin Collection brings together nearly a dozen works by Jean-Michel Basquiat — uniting some of the artist's most recognizable paintings (and a sculpture) under one roof for the first time. The exhibition spotlights the artist's classic themes of portraiture, figure, script and language and his conceptual amplification of color, form and composition.

"I am proud to partner with PAMM to present some of the greatest works by one of America's most iconic artists, Jean-Michel Basquiat, whose art has a unique power to connect across communities and generations," Griffin said in a prepared statement.

Highlights include Italian (1983), Pez Dispenser (1984), a painting of the iconic candy dispenser, and Untitled (Tenant) (1982), in which a distorted, skeletal figure recalls German Expressionism. (through June 6)

Show Me Your Bruises, Then*: This three-channel video installation was written, performed, and directed by British multi-disciplinary artist Zoë Buckman. The video is based on Buckman's free-flowing poem of the same name and explores themes of domestic violence. The exhibition marks the first time her poem will be presented in its entirety. (Nov. 5-May 23)

John Baldessari: The End of the Line: The first major institutional Baldessari survey in South Florida brings together nearly 40 works spanning five decades, drawn from the Craig Robins Collection, running through May 9. A pivotal figure in postwar contemporary art, Baldessari (1931–2020) redefined what art could be, shifting emphasis away from craftsmanship and technical mastery and toward ideas, language, and systems of meaning.

Among the exhibition's early highlights is Clement Greenberg (1966-68), in which the artist hired a commercial sign painter to reproduce the opening lines of the critic Greenberg's essay praising Abstract Expressionism, blurring distinctions between artist, fabricator and idea.

A few years later, he created another radical work, Cremation Project (1970), in which he burned his prior works and transformed their ashes into commemorative objects, breaking with orthodoxy and heading in a new direction. Also on display are his conceptual photographs.

"This exhibition offers a deeper look at Baldessari's expansive practice and enduring impact on contemporary art," says José Carlos Diaz, PAMM senior director of curatorial affairs and chief curator.

This Is America: Selections from PAMM's Collection*: The Pérez also commemorates the 250th anniversary of the country's founding with This Is America. This exhibit, drawn from the museum's own archive, stresses the work of artists from underrepresented communities in showing how artists responded to moments of crisis in American history. Judy Chicago and Rashid Johnson, along with a host of Miami-based artists, are featured in the show, which runs through May 23.

Anina Major: The Sacred Mangrove: In this, the first major exhibition by the Bahamian-born artist in the United States, Major's woven ceramic sculptures (which recall her grandmother's work as a Bahamian straw-weaver) are gathered with crushed shells and other materials to create a walkable ecosystem that offers a meditation on cultural knowledge. Bass Museum of Art

Unviolated Imperfection: Tokyo-based artist Yuko Mohri's first solo exhibition in a U.S. museum demonstrates how Mohri transforms everyday objects into Rube Goldberg-like machines: complex, multi-sensory constructions in which each element influences the others. The exhibition spans three galleries, each highlighting three interconnected ideas that embody her exploration of imperfect compositions.

Through nature and technology in Decomposition, improvisation and kinetics in Moré Moré (Leaky), and chance and sound in Piano Solo, the installations reveal the invisible systems that connect people, objects and environments. (through May 30)

Lecturas Posibles: The Argentine artist Amalia Pica invites viewers to literally redraw their surroundings. In this immersive installation, bookshelves, chairs and desks are surfaces for expression, in which visitors can write on the surfaces with colored chalk, creating an exhibit of collective creation. (through Feb. 12)

Against a State of Malevolence: Another immersive exhibit, this one by the Texas-born artist Sarah Zapata, features large textiles rethought as objects through which visitors can move. "We are empty, we are built, we are many things, but we are not undone, we are a landscape that expands past material," Zapata says in her artist statement. (Through Feb. 28)

Louise Nevelson: Dawn to Dusk: This exhibit features more than 50 works by the celebrated Russian-born American sculptor, following her artistic journey from figurative paintings to abstract wood constructions. The museum says it is one of the most comprehensive exhibitions of the artist's work yet shown in the U.S. (through Jan. 17)

Ofelia Rodríguez: Psychic Jungle*: The first major solo exhibition of work by the late Colombian artist, the show offers examples of Rodriguez's "magic boxes," as well as her paintings, drawings and prints. Look for recurrent images such as a finger, sacred hearts and toys, all of it leavened with a lively sense of humor. (Nov. 14-July 25)

Art Basel

From Maurizio Cattelan's banana on a wall to Yayoi Kusama's Infinity Mirror Room and Kathleen Ryan's decaying fruit sculptures, there is always something abuzz at the mother of all art fairs — Art Basel Miami Beach.

Last year's edition of Art Basel welcomed 283 premier galleries from 43 countries and territories across the Americas, Europe, Asia, the Middle East, and Africa.

This year's edition at the Miami Beach Convention Center promises to envelop greater Miami with a week of museum-quality presentations, diverse public programming, and institutional collaborations — convening artists, galleries, collectors, institutions and creative leaders from across a variety of creative industries, as well as the broader public.

And, who knows, you just might discover the latest art phenom. (Dec. 4-6, open to the public).

figure in the mid-20th-century Chicago art and jazz scenes, Abercrombie put herself into her painted world, which calls upon surrealism in its disjointed use of the figure in self-portraits, landscapes, interior scenes, and still lifes.

Even when she paints herself into the frame, she is dark-eyed, stiff, or performing a strange ritual with strings and fruit and branches. This retrospective exhibit is the first nationally touring presentation of Abercrombie's art. (Oct. 31-March 14)

Teacher and New York artist Tobi Kahn has lived in the natural world of air and liquid over his 40-year career. His exhibit Quest for the Essence is created by two installations, "Sky" and "Water" that prompt reflection on his paintings, works on paper, sculptures, and ritual objects.

The work is not an easy read but is easy on the eyes with abstracted forms that resist realism. Kahn's art has close ties to spirituality, specifically Judaism, whose teachings and practices are integral to his life. But his vision extends beyond any religion or belief system: It's a genuine search for community and healing.

In ZAHRYZ (Tzedek Box), Kahn makes a shape for a contemporary Jewish ritual, inviting viewers to record and remember a time they contributed to the world's healing. His art shows a belief in the modern world, and the eternal search for something holy in it. (Nov. 7- April 4)

Spiritual Ecologies: Art, Nature and Community: In a fast-paced techno world that finds people longing for connection, Spiritual Ecologies explores how meaning can be found through relationships with nature and animals, in ritual and shared experiences, and through physical acts of creation.

With paintings, sculpture, photography, and mixed media, the exhibit shows how art can bring back connection to the natural world, to each other, and maybe even something in the greater beyond. (Nov. 7-April 4)

Morikami Museum and Japanese Gardens

Japanese printmakers have perfected the art of carving intricate designs into blocks of wood, applying ink to the raised surfaces, and transferring the images onto paper. An unlikely master of this Japanese art form was American artist Clifton Karhu (1927-2007), who created his own style of bold outlines, intricate compositions, saturated with color.

Drawn from Morikami's collection, 51 of Karhu's woodblock prints, ceramic works, and stone works will present the range of a prominent foreign-born artist in Japan's modern printmaking community. (through Jan. 17)

Flagler built Whitehall as his permanent residence, in the architectural language of the fair itself. (Nov. 10-May 30)

Paws Up for Pets

How to keep Halloween safe and fun for dogs

With Halloween approaching, let's size up this holiday from your pet's perspective. Your home may harbor piles of candy bars containing a definite doggy no-no: chocolate. On Halloween night Oct. 31, the constant ringing of the front doorbell and parade of people in strange costumes can be enough to spook your pooch into darting out the door or getting into home-turf protective mode.

You may love to see your dog dressed in a Spider-Man costume, but he prefers sporting his collar and ID tags.

How can we keep Halloween fun and safe for your pets? For answers, I turned to two top experts in Palm Beach County: Dr. Lindsay Butzer, DVM, and Jo Jo Harder, creator of America's Top Dog Model contest.

Covering the health and safety aspects is Butzer, who practices veterinary medicine with her father, Dr. Brian Butzer, at Clint Moore Animal Hospital in Boca Raton and is regarded as a top-viewed veterinarian on social media platforms.

"Chocolate is dangerous to dogs because it contains theobromine and caffeine," she says. "Dogs metabolize theobromine extremely slowly, allowing toxic concentrations to build up in their systemic circulation."

She adds that the darker the chocolate, the more dangerous it is to be consumed by dogs. Symptoms can include trembling, vomiting, diarrhea, rapid heart rate and muscle twitches. In some case, even death can occur.

Her recommendations:

• Keep Halloween candy away from access by your dogs.

• Consider handing out small candy sizes and not big candy bars that contain more chocolate.

• Keep hydrogen peroxide on hand that can be used to induce vomiting in dogs.

"Contact your veterinarian immediately or a veterinary toxicologist at the ASPCA Poison Control hotline for guidance on giving the right amount of hydrogen peroxide to your dog to induce vomiting, and definitely get your dog to the vet clinic," adds Butzer.

Dog behavior experts say to be wary of costumes and candy this Halloween season. But Arden Moore's Chihuahua-poodle mix Emma enjoys dressing up, so she'll be a pirate. Photo provided

In addition, she advises preventing your pets from getting near holiday candles.

"The wax from the candles can ball up in a dog's stomach," she says. "The flames can also burn a dog's paw or mouth."

Her final tip: Enjoy taking your children trick-or-treating from house to house in your neighborhood but leave your dog at home.

"Seeing someone in a spooky costume in the dark could startle your dog into biting someone or escaping," she says. "Make sure your dog wears a collar with an ID tag and is microchipped."

For dogs who dig wearing clothes, especially during the upcoming holidays, Harder unleashes great advice. This Boca Raton resident created the annual America's Top Dog Model contest and has authored four books, including Vintage Tails: Featuring America's Top Dog Models.

Fido Fashion Rule No. 1: Verify your dog likes wearing clothes first.

"A dog's body language that may indicate avoidance when it comes to dressing up, include backing away, lowering the body, lip-licking, pawing at the fabric or shaking it off," says Harder. "Not all dogs like wearing clothes and it is important not to force them. Their happiness is our No. 1 priority."

Fido Fashion Rule No. 2: Find the right Halloween costume for your dog that fits.

"Getting the right fit is most important for both comfort and safety," says Harder. "Ill-fitting outfits can restrict movement, cause chafing, or slip out of place. The best fabrics for dog Halloween costumes are lightweight, made of breathable materials like cotton, jersey knit or soft fleece."

Fido Fashion Rule No. 3: Pay attention to your dog's breed.

"The six dog breeds that seem to love wearing clothes and showcasing their style are the poodle, Maltese, Chihuahua, dachshund, Yorkshire terrier and Italian greyhound," says Harder. "I base this on my experience of over 15 years directing America's Top Dog Model national contest and overseeing our dog model casting calls for Paw Prints magazine. These breeds seem to delight in the attention and adoration that comes with dressing up."

Of my three dogs, Kona, Emma and Nova 6 Toes, only Emma (yes, a Chihuahua-poodle mix) enjoys wearing Halloween costumes. She revels in the attention she gets and of course, the treats. This year, she will be a happy, pint-sized pirate.

I wish you and your cool canines a spooktacular and safe Halloween!

Finding Faith

YogaMass connects participants to God through movement

"We breathe in love, we breathe out peace," yoga instructor Daphne Lombardo tells the group of about a dozen people from Gen-Zers to baby boomers who have come to celebrate YogaMass at St. Gregory's Episcopal Church in Boca Raton.

YogaMass is a contemporary worship service that weaves together scripture, prayer and Holy Communion (the Mass part) with gentle movement, stretching, breathing and meditation (the yoga part) to integrate the body, mind and spirit. It's one way, Lombardo says, to separate ourselves from the chaos of our daily lives and grow our relationship with God.

St. Gregory's is always looking for ways to reach more people and help them along their spiritual path, and the Yoga Ministry does that. It was founded by the Rev. Elizabeth Pankey-Warren about eight years ago. Pankey-Warren, who celebrated 38 years as an ordained pastor in 2025, is also a psychotherapist and a 500-hour registered yoga teacher with more than 17 years' experience.

Pankey-Warren

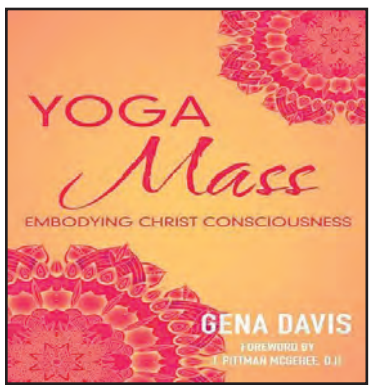

Pankey-Warren said, "I thought, 'How can we make this a spiritual experience that speaks to people who aren't getting what they're searching for in a typical church service?'"

She knew that yoga, as a spiritual practice that engages the body, breath, mind and soul, could help those people become more aware of God's presence in their lives.

YogaMass sessions last about an hour and begin with a warm-up with the yoga teacher, followed by a gospel reading by the pastor. That's followed by about 20 minutes of gentle yoga. At the end, the eucharist is given. Each session is a little different, depending on who is leading. When Pankey-Warren isn't available, volunteers teach the yoga part of the service.

One of them is Lombardo, of Boca Raton.

Lombardo has been practicing yoga since she was a teenager growing up in the Bahamas. She said she had let go of yoga but took it up again seriously after the 9/11 terrorist attacks in 2001. The tragedy also brought Lombardo back to the church.

"It was definitely the impetus to get back to church, to reconnect. There was so much missing that I had neglected for so long," she said.

Inspiration behind classes

In 2017, the Rev. Gena Davis, an Episcopal priest, published "YogaMass: Embodying Christ Consciousness." The book inspired hundreds of congregations like St. Gregory's to begin offering YogaMass, which Davis defines as "a unique worship experience engaging and integrating all of our dimensions — physical, psychological, emotional, mental, energetic, social, and spiritual."

From the yoga mat, it's a quiet, peaceful time filled with positive, affirming messages and slow stretching and movement under the direction of the teacher. The class is perfect for people with no experience with yoga. You don't need to be fit or limber or athletic to benefit, and the class is geared toward newcomers. One woman participated using a chair for part of the class.

> "Yoga gives us an opportunity to use movement to worship God with our bodies, minds, and hearts, with all of us." — Yoga teacher Daphne Lombardo

And it doesn't matter how precisely you execute your pose, Lombardo says. "Your poses, whatever they look like, are perfect," she said.

The movements and breathing we do when practicing yoga are healing, Lombardo explained. We all have traumatic experiences that we are holding inside, and yoga can help release them. "It's like a door that's locked, and the movements of yoga can unlock it," Lombardo said.

"Movement is key to the practice of yoga because it is all about stilling the mind and stilling the body so that you can pray deeply, meditate deeply and hear the voice of God."

On a physical level, Lombardo said, "the stretches also counteract the effects of sitting all day."

Parishioner Julie Grubb of Boca Raton has been coming to YogaMass at St. Gregory's for at least five years. "I try to come as often as I can," she said. Grubb had been practicing yoga on her own, but when she learned about YogaMass, she signed up.

"I enjoy it but I'm not a real yoga person," Grubb said with a laugh. "But I get spirituality, I get peace of mind, and I get a lot of good stretching. And some insightfulness. It's just great."

Because movement is so important, last year the church added a second monthly session called Yoga and Sacred Movement that combines the teachings of yoga with prayer. Participants do gentle movements and breathing exercises while reflecting on scripture verses and reciting traditional prayers. Sometimes they read poetry that aligns with the liturgical calendar, including work by poets like Jan Richardson, Mary Oliver and Malcolm Guite.

In addition to Pankey-Warren and Lombardo, classes are led by volunteer instructors including Jennifer Attonito, Susan Standbrook and Rosie Sandoval. Both YogaMass and Sacred Movement are presented by the Center for Spiritual Formation at St. Gregory's, a learning center for adults seeking to continue their education in theological studies.

There are no figures on how many places of worship are offering some sort of YogaMass, but the combination of yoga and worship isn't exclusive to Episcopalians or even Christians.

Yoga at Temple Beth El

Temple Beth El offers a monthly class, "Mussar and Movement," on its Schaefer Family Campus in Boca Raton. Rabbi Amy Pessah and yoga instructor Amy Appel lead the class, which blends the physical discipline of yoga with the spiritual wisdom of Mussar. Each session focuses on a human attribute such as perseverance, generosity, awe, or orderliness and finds new ways to grow that attribute by mindful movement, breath work and Jewish teachings.

Temple Beth El sessions meet 6:30-8:30 p.m. on Oct. 22, Nov. 17, Dec. 15 and Jan. 20. Bring your own yoga mat.

Register online at tbeboca.shulcloud.com/event/mussar-and-movement2.html, call 561-391-8900 or email RPinhasi@tbeboca.org.

YogaMass meets at St. Gregory's Episcopal Church, 100 NE Mizner Blvd., Boca Raton, on the last Saturday of the month. Yoga and Sacred Movement meets the third Thursday. Check the church calendar for dates and times.

"I want people to see yoga as a way of life," Lombardo said, "as part of their spiritual discipline that they do on a regular basis. It doesn't have to be postures all the time. It could be meditation; it could be breathing practices. I want them to take what yoga gives them on the mat and share that with other people because this world is so in need of peace."

Local ministries and nonprofits fight hunger wars

September was Hunger Action Month and local churches and nonprofits rallied around the cause, hosting meetings, food drives and events designed to raise awareness about stressed food pantries and hungry schoolchildren in Palm Beach County.

According to the Palm Beach County Food Bank, more than 192,000 county residents face food insecurity. One person in eight struggles to put food on the table, and one in six children may go to bed hungry tonight.

Kenneth McCoy, the volunteer director of the St. Joan of Arc Catholic Church Care Ministry & Food Pantry, and Grace Fishter, a longtime volunteer with the ministry, hosted a luncheon in the Boca Raton parish's Mercy Center in August attended by representatives from local ministries and nonprofits.

The organizations learned more about one another's work, discussed their needs and explored ways to collaborate more effectively.

"One organization can't serve all the needs," McCoy said. He invited people who have been working together but who had never met face-to-face to break bread together. "Now we're texting back and forth, we have each other's cellphone numbers. It really made a difference."

Participating organizations included the Farmworker Coordinating Council of Palm Beach County, Spanish River Church, St. Ann Place Outreach Center, the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, Ruth & Norman Rales Jewish Family Services, Changing Lives, the Salvation Army, Ascension Catholic Church, Catholic Charities and CROS Ministries.

Many churches have food pantries, and food drives are one of the ways they restock the shelves. For example, First Presbyterian Church of Delray Beach is holding a food drive through October, while other local churches collect food for their pantries year-round.

Local need is growing, McCoy said.

"A lot more people are reaching out to the church," McCoy said. "We get a lot of seniors and we get a lot of families, but more working poor and people who have fallen upon bad times are seeking services. A lot of these people never thought they'd be in this situation, but it only takes one minor disaster to send someone into a tailspin."

CROS Ministries continues to fight the good fight. The nonprofit reported that it rescued 402,582 pounds of fresh produce through 186 gleaning events in Palm Beach and Martin counties during the 2025-26 season. The effort was made possible by 3,278 volunteers.

A portion of the rescued produce is distributed through CROS food pantries and its Caring Kitchen program. Additional produce is shared with distribution partners, including Feeding South Florida, Farm Share, Palm Beach County Food Bank, Good Shepherd Episcopal Church, The Glades Initiative, House of Hope of Martin County, and Tree of Life Resource Center. These organizations help move fresh produce into food pantries, meal programs and other hunger-relief services.

CROS's annual Hustle to End Hunger run, which this year is Oct. 3 at John Prince Park in Lake Worth Beach, raises awareness and money to feed the hungry. It's a massive effort: CROS provided food bags to more than 121,000 individuals in 2025.

The most needed food drive items include canned vegetables, canned fruit, canned tuna or chicken, peanut butter, pasta, pasta sauce, rice, dried beans, cereal, oatmeal, macaroni and cheese, canned soups, canned pasta, shelf-stable milk and other pantry staples.

Unity School wins award

Unity School in Delray Beach was recognized in September as South Florida's sole recipient of the 2026 Association for Middle Level Education School of Distinction honors. The award evaluates how effectively an institution's culture, curriculum and leadership respond to the physical, social and emotional shifts of early adolescence.

The school, which is run by Unity Church of Delray Beach, is being celebrated as a model for middle-grade excellence, one of just 39 worldwide to achieve this milestone. Unity's initiatives are designed to integrate character development directly into the academic day in two ways: "Lessons in Living and Leadership" is a specialized curriculum focused on ethical decision-making, resilience, public speaking and practical life skills, while the CommUNITY Group fosters peer mentorship, emotional safety and a sense of belonging.

Genevieve Hoppe, the head of school at Unity, said the honor "validates our commitment to educating the entire child — mind, body and spirit. By prioritizing adolescent well-being alongside academic rigor, we create an environment where middle schoolers don't just navigate these transitional years; they thrive."

Love the outdoors? Wear proper apparel to protect skin and eyes

Sun protection is a year-round concern for South Floridians who spend time outdoors.

Choosing safe, effective products to protect your eyes and skin is an even bigger concern given the poor quality of everything from sunscreen to clothing to sunglasses.

Outerknown makes sustainable clothing for women and men and is known for its blanket shirts. The company (outerknown.com) has introduced a collection of garments that offer UPF 50+ sun protection for those who spend time in and around the water.

The men's and women's long sleeve sun shirts are made from 100% post-consumer recycled polyester. The soft, comfortable shirts are quick-drying and moisture-wicking with anti-odor properties.

Men have a choice of a hooded sun shirt in three colors for additional protection. All the shirts have thumb holes to keep the sun's rays off your hands and a hidden bungee key holder inside a sleeve cuff.

For women, Outerknown also offers the Surf Suit, ideal for surfers, snorkelers and swimmers, and the Origin One Piece bathing suit. Both are made from a blend of ultra-soft recycled Econyl nylon and spandex.

For serious sun lovers who fish, surf, dive and paddle, Outerknown offers the Kelly Slater-inspired Apex Evolution Hooded Rashguard shirt. Made of two-way stretch fabric that has a compression-like fit, the unique hood has a brim to help keep the sun's glare out of your eyes. The company also has a Sun Polo for men that is ideal for playing golf or going out for dinner.

Fans of the outdoors know it's important to protect their skin and eyes from the harmful effects of the sun. Several apparel and sunglass manufacturers produce top-notch products such as the hooded shirt shown above. Photo provided

The Maui Jim sunglass brand (mauijim.com) has made it a priority to dispel common myths about protecting your eyes from the sun's UVA and UVB rays. The myths include:

• You need sunglasses only when it's sunny. Ultraviolet rays penetrate clouds and reflect off the surface of the water. That's also why you can get sunburned on a cloudy day.

• The darker the lenses, the better the protection. Lens tint does not determine UV protection; proper UVA/UVB blocking does.

• Polarized lenses are all you need for UV protection. Polarization reduces glare from reflective surfaces, but it does not automatically provide UVA/UVB protection. Maui Jim's PolarizedPlus2 lenses eliminate 100% of UV radiation and 99.9% of glare, which keeps your eyes from getting fatigued.

• Cheap sunglasses work just fine. Not only is the lens quality of cheap sunglasses questionable, the fit, comfort and frame materials also are suspect compared to premium sunglasses. I've been wearing Maui Jim's Ho'okipa Ultra R sunglasses anytime I'm outside.

The lenses are clear and sharp, and the frames are so lightweight, it's easy to forget that I'm wearing them. And the sunglasses are perfect for fishing because the lenses cut through glare, allowing me to see fish in the water that others with inferior eyewear cannot.

Like sunglasses, there are countless brands of sunscreen. Few of them can protect your skin safely.

Too many sunscreens, including many of the best-known brands, contain chemicals that block the sun's rays but are harmful to the human body and marine life.

Among the safest alternatives are mineral-based sunscreens like those offered by Dermatone (dermatone.com).

Dermatone's SPF 30 Mineral Sunscreen uses non-nano zinc oxide to deliver broad-spectrum UVA and UVB protection. Many mineral sunscreens can feel thick, chalky or difficult to rub in. Dermatone Mineral Sunscreen's lightweight, non-greasy formula spreads easily, absorbs comfortably and leaves skin feeling smooth without a heavy residue.

The sunscreen contains aloe, vitamins C, B3 and E, and is fragrance free. It's also reef safe, so you can swim and dive while wearing it without harming the region's coral reefs.

Unlike so many other sunscreens, it does not contain oxybenzone and octinoxate. Those ingredients can kill coral larvae and have a negative effect on fish, sea turtles and other sea life while also being absorbed into human skin and disrupting the endocrine system.

Health & Harmony

Pinkball founder helps women fight breast cancer

When Michelle Stallone moved from the Bronx to west Boca Raton in 1994, she brought two things with her: a lifelong devotion to the Yankees and a deep instinct to help people.

Working at the Christine E. Lynn Women's Health & Wellness Institute as a breast imaging supervisor at Boca Raton Regional Hospital for 27 years, Stallone called women who needed follow-up visits after their mammograms.

She found that during the recession years of 2007-2008, many women were reluctant to come back for their follow-up visits because they had lost either their insurance or their jobs, or were worried how they could pay for mammogram screenings, MRIs, biopsies or further care.

When she learned some didn't qualify for assistance programs because they earned slightly above the poverty threshold, she was moved to action.

"It didn't sit right with me," says the mother of two, who is related by marriage to the actor Sylvester Stallone. "I could be in this situation. I know what it's like to not have employer insurance."

That realization became the catalyst for Pinkball, the breast cancer charity she founded.

Inspired by Major League Baseball's Mother's Day pink-out, Stallone, 56, organized an event with her son's baseball team and in 2008, Pinkball's first year, raised $2,100.

Why baseball?

"Everyone has a gala," she says. "We wanted something that felt like us. It was so much fun and I knew we could build something bigger."

Pinkball, with its mission to "Strike Out Breast Cancer," has screened 3,300 women, identified 46 breast cancer cases, and built a safety net for the women Stallone calls "the middle."

To date, Pinkball has raised $1.5 million, according to Shakira Sarquis-Kolber, director of the health and wellness institute.

"Michelle does not sit by idly for anything," says Sarquis-Kolber. "She saw a need and dove right in."

Sarquis-Kolber sees these services as having a generational impact. "When you save one woman's life, think of all the other lives that are affected," she says.

Stallone, she says, is "relentless" in her pursuit of helping others. "Her mission is to allow women to put themselves and their health first without feeling a financial burden."

All Pinkball donations go into the hospital's Go Pink Fund through the Boca Raton Regional Hospital Foundation.

The nonprofit provides money for breast cancer screenings, diagnostic procedures and treatment — for uninsured and underinsured women — while also connecting them to providers at the hospital. The goal is to remove barriers to care so women can focus on their treatment, recovery and well-being.

Former Yankee Tanyon Sturtze (l-r) and professional golfer Morgan Pressel joined founder Michelle Stallone at the 2026 Pinkball All-Star Dinner & Auction, at which Pressel's breast cancer foundation was honored. Pressel lost her mother to cancer when she was 15. Photo provided

Over the years, Pinkball has gotten help from some major league ballplayers, including former Yankees Jorge Posada, Johnny Damon, Tino Martinez and Tanyon Sturtze.

In a September fundraiser, people could buy tickets to a "Legends Suite" at Yankee Stadium with Roger Clemens and other players for a game.

And while the signature All-Star Dinner & Auction is not until February, this month Pinkball will hold several fundraising events, including a Boca Raton Little League Wear Pink, Play Pink Day on Oct. 3 and a "Pinkleball" Tournament at The Boca Raton on Oct. 7.

Pinkball now supports women across Palm Beach, Martin, Broward and Miami-Dade counties, and has plans to expand throughout Florida and possibly another state as the organizers see a need.

"As it grows, opportunities present themselves," says Stallone, who co-owns Stallone's Italian Kitchen in Boca Raton with her husband, Bobby. "There are women in other places who need access, too."

That passion is echoed by others in the community, including Carrie Rubin, who serves on the Boca Raton hospital foundation's board and the hospital's governing board.

She describes Stallone as "a force of nature" whose passion and unwavering commitment have made Pinkball more impactful each year.

For Rubin, some of the most powerful moments come from hearing directly from women in their 30s and 40s who had nowhere else to turn. "Without Michelle and her two MammoVans, these women wouldn't have had access to care. She's a spitfire — and she's changing lives.

"When I think about Pinkball, I think about Michelle," Rubin says. "She puts her heart and soul into it. Watching the charity grow is inspiring."

For Stallone, the mission remains simple: Bring people together, break down barriers, and make sure no woman faces breast cancer alone.

She never imagined Pinkball would become what it is today — and even though she's still in the early innings, she fully intends to win the game.

Snow scholarship rewards Boca High graduate's determination

By Faran Fagen

When Joshua Browning learned he received an important scholarship one day after his graduation from Boca Raton High School, he jumped into the air and screamed out, "Yes!" His father, William, shed a tear.

"The best part about being chosen is knowing that I have the support of the George Snow Scholarship Fund as I begin this next chapter of my life," Browning said. "I believe they chose me because of my story. I worked hard, stayed involved in my school and my Boca Raton community, and continued to push myself throughout these four years of my high school career, even when things were difficult or if I was going through a tough time in my life."

Browning, 19, is one of this year's recipients of the Carl Angus DeSantis Foundation Scholarship, which partners with the George Snow Scholarship Fund to finance trade and career programs in Florida. The George Snow Scholarship Fund, based in Boca Raton, is dedicated to helping deserving students achieve their career goals through their pursuit of higher education. Since its inception in 1982, the fund has awarded more than $47 million in educational grants and support services.

But the scholarship didn't come easy to Browning, who lives in east Boca Raton.

One of his biggest challenges in high school was managing his learning differences while keeping up with a demanding workload. He was enrolled in a specialized Individual Education Program since he was young, and struggled with things like reading quickly, organizing his thoughts, and working under time pressure.

"I learned that I could not always approach school the same way as everyone else might be able to," Browning said. "I had to break assignments into smaller parts, manage my time carefully, and ask for help when I needed it from my support team at school."

He also had to budget extra time to make sure he was able to fully grasp what he was taught.

"Over time, I became more confident and learned that having challenges does not mean I can't reach my goals. I am the future for tomorrow. I must keep pushing."

He found the George Snow Scholarship through Boca High's college and career center and learned more about the opportunity through the Snow family organization on its website, scholarship.org. The application was a lot of work, but it gave Browning a chance to talk about his experiences, accomplishments, challenges and goals.

"It was also a good opportunity to reflect on how much I had grown throughout high school," he said.

Browning chose to attend Flagler College in St. Augustine, majoring in hospitality and tourism management. He picked Flagler because he liked the campus and the environment in St. Augustine.

"I also felt that the hospitality and tourism program was good since it's such a small school and they focus more on their students compared to any other big Florida state school," he said. "It was a good fit for my interests within traveling and also for my future and my goals as a whole."

His career goal is to become a hotel manager or even own and run his own hotel. Working in areas such as event planning or social media marketing would also be within his interests.

"I enjoy working with people, creating experiences, and being part of an environment where people make good memories," Browning said.

"As an adult, I hope to use my career to make people feel welcome and included. I also want to give back to my community and support other young people who may be facing challenges similar to ones that I experienced growing up."

This sentiment was cultivated when he served as president of MindLift, a physical and mental health organization where students could support one another and seek support for themselves. Through this club, he brought together students of all backgrounds and offered them a chance to share their struggles and goals as they worked through academic or athletic pressures and emotional issues.

Recently, Browning got the chance to attend the High School to College Transition Orientation, a daylong event designed to help prepare Snow scholars for their first year in college.

During the orientation, Browning received advice on pursuing hospitality and tourism management from Zoe Lanham, an executive at The Addison of Boca Raton. Meeting an industry leader further inspired him to see the range of opportunities that await him in his career.

This scholarship will also ease his family's financial burden. Browning will not be the only one attending college in his family. Next year his sister, Julia, will graduate from high school. His dad, William, and mom, Helenice, must figure out how to support two college educations at once.

"The financial support of the scholarship will help with the cost of my college education and allow me to focus more on school and being able to get involved on campus," Browning said.

"However, I see the scholarship as more than just a financial helper or boost. Being a Snow scholar also gives me access to a community of people who want to see me succeed." ★
