Ritz name change concerns commission, residents

By Tim O'Meilia

The former Ritz-Carlton Palm Beach is now the Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa.

But eau so many Manalapan residents dislike the new name and the loss of the Ritz-Carlton brand.

"How and why did you change that name?" wondered Manalapan Town Commissioner John Murphy at the June 25 meeting.

"In general, people don't like it. The reaction has not been favorable."

Nevertheless, the commission approved by a 5-0 vote two temporary signs with the new name to adorn the 310-room luxury resort.

The Ritz officially became The Eau on July 1, following a mid-June announcement by the hotel owners, RC/PB Inc., that a management agreement with Ritz-Carlton, owned by Marriott International, had been canceled following a two-year dispute over management fees.

The resort will be affiliated with Preferred Hotels, which handles 15 other five-star, five-diamond hotels worldwide.

Former Mayor Basil Diamond suggested that the hotel name could not be changed without the commission's approval, based on an amendment to the planned unit development agreement that led to the hotel's opening in 1991.

"The only reason we have a

The scanner crackled: "Possible near drowning" in Gulf Stream.

Delray Beach Fire-Rescue responded about 2:30 p.m. on that last Friday in May.

Soon a battalion chief would interrupt a meeting to summon Ocean Rescue Superintendent James Scala to the beach. He was needed to lead the search for the missing swimmer.

Rodelson Normil, 17, disappeared in the rough surf, in an unguarded area about a half-mile south of Gulfstream Park.

"I take them to the terminal to show them a piece of Americana."

The terminal, built in the style of an Old Florida farmhouse with a breezeway through the middle, has an office with wooden benches and model planes hanging from the ceiling. The

After a life of writing, author recommends perseverance

By Ron Hayes

On the wall of her third-floor office in Florida Atlantic University's Culture & Society Building, the director of the university's creative writing program has posted a sign she doesn't need to read.

Live What You Love.

The sign is there to inspire all those aspiring novelists and poets Ayşe Papatya Bucak encourages — and criticizes — each term.

"Yes, I was one of those," she says with a laugh. "As a child, once I'd learned to read, I thought, 'Oh, how do you do this?' You want to create what you've enjoyed so much."

Bucak's love of reading led to a love of writing. And now, living what she loves has led to her upcoming appearance in two of the nation's most prestigious fiction anthologies.

In September, The History of Girls, an eerie tale of the living and dead conversing under a collapsed building, will be published in the 2013 PEN/O'Henry Prize Stories.

And next year, Iconography, a surreal fable of a university hunger striker, can be found in the 2014 Pushcart Prizes: Best of the Small Presses XXXVIII.

For those unfamiliar with the O'Henry and Pushcart prizes, suffice it to say that Bucak joins such writers as John Irving, Stephen King, Joyce Carol Oates, Saul Bellow and Tim O'Brien, all previous winners of one or both awards. "It's been a nice year," she says.

Bucak (pronounced Boo-jack) was born in Istanbul of a Turkish father and American mother and came to Ardmore, Pa., at the age of 4. She earned a B.A. from Princeton University, an M.F.A. from Arizona State, and has been at FAU since 2003. She lives in Delray Beach.

"The first thing I tell my students is, 'Tortoise beats hare,'" she says. "They're 23, and they want to be rich and famous and published. But you have to put your time in. It helps to have talent, but perseverance is far more necessary."

Bucak knows. An early says. "Literary fiction makes you want to engage life. I'm interested in writing that's accessible but also wants to say something."

In addition to writing and teaching, Bucak keeps a blog, Reading For Writers, on which she comments on the books she's read and writers she admires.

"My favorite novel of all time is Catch-22," she says. "That's my desert island book."

Even on that desert island, though, she would still write.

"I tell my students they have to learn how to write any place, under any circumstances, for any length of time," she says.

Or, as the sign on her door puts it: Don't Forget To Write. ★

Hoping new team at 'Ritz' will keep community in mind

One of the best-known and most admired brand names in the world is Ritz-Carlton. It connotes glamour, elegance and luxury. For 20-plus years, The Ritz-Carlton Palm Beach was our little "ritzzy" spot.

Of course, we'd chuckle at that "Palm Beach" tagline. Sure, we understood the hotel wanted to tell tourists they were staying in Palm Beach, but we knew better. The Ritz was our luxurious little secret in an almost private sweet spot at the confluence of South Palm Beach, Lantana and Manalapan.

Now "our Ritz" has become The Eau Palm Beach Resort and Spa. I hope this management change doesn't overlook the hotel's long relationship with the community.

Granted, it's not an everyday stop for most of us who live here, but the hotel has always been there to welcome us when we've wanted to put on a little "Ritz." And of course, it's where Manalapan residents have historically had their private social club.

As a small-business owner, I know very well how important it is to build and sustain a brand identity. For The Coastal Star, it's how our readers and advertisers feel about our product. It's our reputation. We believe our brand illustrates that we care about our customers and our neighbors.

I know the new team at The Eau Palm Beach have their work cut out for them in establishing a new brand. I can only hope they will also care about their customers and neighbors. I wish them luck.

Property values — mostly — inching upward

By Tim O'Meilia

Budget managers in eight of nine South County coastal communities can exhale.

Taxable real estate values — the stuff property taxes are made of — continues to creep back toward pre-recession levels.

Taxable property values in eight towns increased this year and all at a greater rate than last year. Four of them matched or outpaced the Palm Beach County-wide uptick of 4.2 percent.

Only Briny Breezes — a town of fewer than 500 mobile homes — continued to lose value, dropping 0.75 percent, but even that was a smaller decline than last year.

"It's getting a little better each year," said Ocean Ridge Town Manager Ken Schenck, where values increased 3.87 percent. "It's never going to get back to where it was, but maybe that's a good thing."

Manalapan and Delray Beach saw the largest increases, both topping 6.4 percent.

One upside of more property taxes to spend is that towns won't be forced to dip into their reserves to balance the budget, as some have in recent years.

"We might have a chance to catch up on capital projects," said Highland Beach Town Manager Kathleen Weiser,

	2012 Taxable Value	2013 Taxable Value	Percent Change
Boca Raton	$16,588,217,273	$17,284,003,329	+4.19
Briny Breezes	$36,168,060	$35,895,685	-0.75
Delray Beach	$6,209,261,043	$6,612,004,527	+6.49

referring to renovating the Town Hall or replacing aging police cars, projects that had been put off because of the bad economy.

South Palm Beach is not expecting a windfall with its 0.54 percent increase.

"At least it's better than being down 1 percent" as the town was last year, said Town Manager Rex Taylor.

Even the increased property values won't make budgeting any easier.

"We don't know what the Affordable Health Care Act will do to our health insurance rates (for employees). The quotes are all over the place," Taylor said.

"And," he added, "the retirement system rates are going up." ★

Literacy Coalition's new space opens debt-free

By Ron Hayes

As a child growing up in small-town Waxahatchie, Texas, Brenda Medore used to visit the Carnegie library and marvel at the beauty of the building, and the magic of the books.

"I just thought that library was so wonderful," she remembers. "I'd go in and look up, and my mouth would fall open."

Medore lives in Gulf Stream now, but she brought her love of reading with her. And now she's put her money where her mouth is.

On June 20, she and her husband, C.P., were among the happy crowd of donors and friends gathered at 3651 Quantum Blvd., Boynton Beach to celebrate the opening of the Blume Literacy Center on the Brenda & C.P. Medore Campus.

"C.P. and I have always shared a great love of reading," she said, "maybe even taking for granted our ability to read. Now we want to help children and adults have every opportunity to learn to read."

When Founding President Gale Howden established the Literacy Coalition of Palm Beach County in 1989, its headquarters consisted of a desk and phone in the United Way building. For 20 years, the coalition pressed on from a crowded office in a bank building on Federal Highway in Delray Beach.

Now, the coalition has a permanent home — 12,000 square feet in a brand-new, $3.5 million building just north of Gateway Boulevard.

At the evening's open house, CEO Darlene Kostrub told the throng that she'd been cleaning out her files recently, preparing for the move, when she happened on a 2006 email from a staff member. A Boca Raton woman named Margaret Blume had called, wanting to know more about the coalition's mission. Blume's pledge of $2 million gave birth to a capital ABOVE: Margaret Blume is awarded a gift during the opening of the Blume Literacy Center on the Brenda and C.P. Medore Campus. Brenda and C.P. campaign, and the Medores' major gift of $500,000 financed the campus. In the end, 525 donors have allowed the new center to open debt-free. And they weren't all grown-ups, either.

Dorothea Zarcadoolas is an 8-year-old book lover from Ocean Ridge, a third-grader at Gulf Stream School who loves the Diary Of a Wimpy Kid and Dork Diary books.

"We have to go in at night and tell her to turn off the reading light," says her dad, Paul.

When she heard about the coalition's capital drive, Dorothea started working her phone. "She called me up and asked for money for the Literacy Coalition," recalls her aunt, Anthea Hancock. "I said, 'What's the Literacy Coalition?'"

By the time she finished calling relatives, young Dorothea had raised $1,000.

And she wasn't alone.

Young readers Caroline Calder, Sophia Dickenson and Maya Kumar also raised $1,000 each. Their names are listed on the donor wall, too, along with Blume and the Medores.

As caterers moved through the crowd with hors d'oeuvres and young violinists added subdued background music, Kostrub described what a new building will mean for the coalition's mission.

"This is going to expand what we can do," she said. "In the past, we could only tutor children who attended the schools where we had an after-school program. Now we have a place where we can both train our tutors and invite children from anywhere who need some extra help."

Since those early desk-and-phone days, the coalition has distributed more than 794,000 free books to poor children. Now they have a "book distribution center," shelf after shelf of children's books ready to be handed out in pediatrician's offices.

The AmeriCorps volunteers who have tallied 494,000 hours of tutoring over the years have their own training space now.

There are offices for training adult readers, including the Family Education Program in Belle Glade, where migrant parents and their children gather to learn English together.

As Margaret Blume said, "There's something so simple and pure and beautiful about teaching someone to read."

And then she asked Darlene Kostrub to step outside once more.

A shrouded figure had appeared beside the building.

The cloth was pulled away to reveal a statue of a familiar woman reading to a small child.

The sculpture, by Delray Beach artist Frank Varga, is called Reading With Darlene, a tribute to the woman who has led the coalition since 1992, helping men, women and children in Palm Beach County learn to read. ★

Around Town

Eau. Eau yes. Eau no.

Unless something dramatic happens, literally, at the midnight hour, the Ritz-Carlton Palm Beach in Manalapan will become Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa.

Rest assured, it didn't happen overnight. Two years ago, the resort's owners, RC/PB, sued the resort's management team, Marriott International and Avendra for "utter disregard of fiduciary, contractual and statutory obligations." Essentially, RC/PB says Marriott is skimming profits, the suit claimed.

Marriott and Avendra have countersued for breach of contract. Down in Miami, the legendary Eden Roc has severed its ties with Marriott's Renaissance management company for similar reasons. RC/PB has assured its more than 450 employees that they will retain their jobs and salaries if they stay.

To handle sales and marketing at Eau, RC/PB has hired Preferred Hotel Group, which is hardly new to the neighborhood. Based in Chicago, Preferred contracts with hotels on every continent except Antarctica, including Jupiter Beach Resort and, in Delray, the Colony and The Seagate. Eau. Uh, eau.

Surprise, surprise! Trader Joe's is coming to Boca.

A month ago, all the talk was about the hot, hot, hot California-based specialty grocer opening its first South Florida store in Miami this fall and another in Palm Beach Gardens next year. That all changed June 25 when the company added Boca Raton ... sometime next year.

No word on what this might mean for the proposed Delray Beach location at Linton Boulevard and Federal Highway.

Joe's is hip. It sells lots gourmet, organic and "alternative" food. Cheeses, wines and beers, tofu, even vitamins. No MSG or trans fats. No artificial hormones in its dairy products. Service is a cornerstone. In 2009, Consumer Reports and MSN Money ranked it No. 2 in customer service.

The brand is owned by the German family trust Markus-Stiftung, parent company of Aldi Nord, a supermarket chain which recently began to open Aldi supermarkets in Palm Beach County. Compared with large grocers such as Publix, which may stock 50,000 different items, Trader Joe's offers about 4,000, most of which carry its own brand names, which helps keep prices lower.

The Boca store, planned for the East City Center, a new three-building complex of shops and offices, will occupy only 12,500 square feet, about one-third that of the Publix a block away. You can bet the Lakeland-based big boy already has taken notice.

Long before Boca began to bustle with trendy, chic, hot, hot, hot restaurants, the standard by which all others were measured was "the old house." In French it sounds so different, so much more pretentious — La Vieille Maison — but for three decades it was the place to go.

Built in 1927 as a home on East Palmetto Park Road, a block east of the Intracoastal, it was bought in the '70s by Leonice Picot and transformed into a French delight. Several dining rooms. Tuxedoed, multilingual waiters. Menus without prices for women guests. Food to live for. Constantly ranked among the state's best. Groupon-like deals, forget it.

But age and economics forced Picot to sell in 2006. In 2011, the building was deemed beyond repair and bulldozed.

One of the people who grew up in Picot's shadow was Arturo Gismondi. Over the years he's become the Italian equivalent to Picot, with two highly regarded restaurants

Gismondi

(Arturo's Ristorante on North Federal, Trattoria Romana on East Palmetto Park Road), Cannoli Kitchen takeouts east and west and, most recently, Biergarten Boca Raton, a Tyrolean drafthouse in revitalized Royal Palm Place.

Now Gismondi wants to try something French. He's found a site — the former Lilly's in the building (at 5 Palms apartment complex) next to Trattoria Romana. Proposed as an homage to La Vieille Maison, but with a modern twist, it will be called La Nouvelle Maison ("The New House"). Arturo plans a January opening.

Westward, ho! ... Merchants along Atlantic Avenue complain business is suffering because too much happens on Delray's "main street." Street festivals, parades, dining events at long, long tables — it's just too much. So the folks who organize many of those events — the Delray Beach Marketing Cooperative — are moving in a different direction.

Instead of running east along Atlantic Avenue from Swinton, the Aug. 8 On the Ave celebration will run north-south from the bandshell at Atlantic and Northwest Fifth Avenue to Spady Elementary School. A month later, the party will move back east but will keep the north-south orientation through Pineapple Grove.

The recently renamed Delray Beach Center for the Arts at Old School Square — still known to hoi polloi as Old School Square — has always offered a little something for everyone. With acts such as the Lettermen (Nov. 22-24), Home for the Holidays on Ice (Dec. 20-22), The Patti Page Story (Jan. 17-19), Hair (Feb. 14-16); Rhythm of the Dance (March 7-9) and The Golden Dragon Acrobats' Cirque Ziva (March 28-30), the 2013-14 season continues that skein.

Executive Director Joe Gillie will have a difficult time, however, trying to top this season's lecture series, which opens glamorously Jan. 16 with Golden Globe and People's Choice winner Linda Evans. The star of Big Valley and Dynasty is no stranger to the area, although Delray has certainly changed since her 10-year relationship with Manalapan resident Yanni defense, and in May 2011 he began serving a life sentence. In February 2012, Smart married Matthew Gilmour, whom she met in Paris, where both were serving as Mormon missionaries.

Tony Mendez, the mastermind behind the hostage rescue mission chronicled in Oscar-winner Argo — he was played by Ben Affleck — speaks March 20, followed April 10 by Story Musgrave, the 30-year NASA astronaut who performed the first shuttle spacewalk and led the Hubble telescope repair team.

"It's crazy; it gets better every year," Gillie said. "The lower level is already sold out. There won't be a seat left." (243-7922 or delraycenterforthearts.org)

Just in time for the city's 100th anniversary celebration, the Lake Worth Historical Museum — closed for 17 months after the City Council cut it from the budget — is open again on the second floor of the City Hall Annex. A small staff of volunteers welcomes the public from 1 to 4 p.m. on Wednesdays and Fridays, with more hours to be added as additional volunteers sign on. Call 533-7354.

Art to the east, art to the west ... If everything works out with the Community Redevelopment Agency's grant application, the old shuffleboard center on Lucerne will become an art center. City commissioners voted in mid-June to lease the center to the CRA and to spend $37,500 to design the renovation. It's part of the CRA's plan to emphasize art, which sparked the move of the Cultural Council of Palm Beach County to 601 E. Lake Ave. and construction of 12 live/work townhomes for artists across the street. Of course, if the CRA's application for a state grant falls through, the lease will be killed.

The CRA envisions an arts district extending west to Lake Worth High School. Goals and reality, however, often don't jibe. Lake Worth may be ambitious, but the town isn't as well off financially as Boca or Delray, and while development of an arts community would seem to be a noble cause, some residents like shuffleboard, others just don't want change and still others would like to see the city return to what it was like 100 years ago.

Tripping the not-so-light fantastic ... The folks who run the George Snow Scholarship Fund have announced the participants for the Sixth Annual Boca Ballroom Battle. The Aug. 16 event at the Boca Raton Resort & Club pairs members of the community with professional dancers from the Fred Astaire Dance Studio who compete for a grand prize — the coveted mirrored ball.

The lineup includes Miami Dolphins chief financial and administrative officer Mark Brockelman; Gary Collins, general manager at Frenchman's Reserve Country Club; plastic surgeon Dr. Anthony N. Dardano; Dorothy MacDiarmid, partner at Cloud 9 Consulting; Marie Occhigrossi, an attorney with Weitz & Luxenberg; Global Communication Networks founder and CEO Chris Palermo; Cecilia Peters, educator at Westminster Academy; Marie Speed, editor at Boca Raton magazine.

school stadium for GEO, the prisons for-profit corporation with headquarters just across I-95 from the campus.

On- and off-campus reports have Crudele, former senior vice president of financial affairs, with a steady hand on the throttle. And barely a month on the job, the school's trustees moved him from acting to interim president. That gives the board some time to search, since Crudele is set to retire at the end of 2014.

As Saunders headed out, some new, much-needed faces headed in — to improve public relations. And not just with the GEO and mislabeled "Stomp Jesus" classroom controversies. Two professional public relations agencies have been retained to develop a better system for getting the word out about the positive contributions FAU makes in the community. Until that move was made, the school employed only two full-time publicists; most schools of its size rely on 10 or more.

One of their first projects will be to spread the news about Dr. Deandre Poole, the communications instructor involved in the so-called "Stomp Jesus" incident last spring. Using an exercise developed at a Christian institution and used at many schools, Poole instructed his students to write "Jesus" on a sheet of paper and then step on the paper. One student took issue with the exercise, protested vociferously and confronted Poole.

School administrators at first suspended the student, for reportedly threatening Poole. Then Gov. Rick Scott jumped in — the student was reinstated, and Poole was suspended pending an inquiry. School administrators cited concerns for his safety. National media jumped all over it, especially conservative Christians. With no supporting evidence, many suggested that Poole, himself a devout Christian, had some other agenda because he is vice chair of the Palm Beach County Democratic Executive Committee.

Actually, the textbook was written by James Neuliep, a professor at St. Norbert College, a small Roman Catholic school in De Pere, Wis. Neuliep has used the exercise in his classes for 30 years without incident.

On June 21, Poole was reinstated.

FAU's baseball team made it to the NCAA tournament before being eliminated by top-seeded North Carolina, 12-11 in 13 innings.

How far has the football team progressed since Coach Carl Pellini took over the program last year? It should provide some answers on Aug. 30 when the team plays the University of Miami. Not just alums who don't travel to Sun Life Stadium in Miami, but also a national audience can assess the Owls on national TV, courtesy of ESPN.

FAU's MBA program in sports management has been ranked fifth in North America and eighth in the world in the 2013 SportBusiness International rankings of master's-level sport courses by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business. FAU is the only school in Florida to make the top 25 world rankings. Ohio University was ranked No. 1, followed by FIFA's International Center for Sports Studies in Switzerland. Impressive company.

An estimated 9,000 fans, most of whom had never been on campus, now know the new stadium is also an excellent venue for soccer. Germany battled Ecuador in a "friendly." German striker Lukas Podolski scored with barely nine seconds gone in the match — reputed to be the second-fastest goal ever in an international match.

The stadium may not have a sponsor, but new Athletics Director Pat Chun, who cut his administrative teeth at athletic powerhouse Ohio State, is trying to land a new bowl game to wrap up the 2014 season.

Chun

It wouldn't be anything near the caliber of an Orange or Rose Bowl, but the location is ideal, the weather is good and the signs are encouraging.

"The only lights we've had are green," Chun told Chuck King of Owl Access blog. "Nothing yellow and nothing red."

On June 16, shortly after being admitted to Boca Raton Regional Hospital, Boca Raton Airport Manager Ken Day died from an "undisclosed illness." Speculation has arisen that Day, 56, suffered a heart attack, but the cause of death has not been disclosed.

"We're a bit stunned around here, to say the least," airport public affairs director and office manager Kimberly Whalen said.

Back in March when the word of the day was "sequestration," folks around the airport got a little antsy as the Federal Aviation Administration threatened to eliminate financing for control-tower staff. Concurrently, departing Airport Authority member David Freudenberg began to question the $1.2 million in salaries and benefits paid to airport employees. He was particularly critical of Day's $218,000 salary, especially since Bruce Pelly, the boss at much larger and much busier Palm Beach International Airport, makes $15,000 less.

Supporters jumped to Day's defense, noting that during his 13-year tenure, the airport's cash reserves grew from $600,000 to $6.5 million. Authority Chairman Frank Feiler said he wished he could pay the staff more because the airport "is well-run, well-managed and well thought of."

A search committee has been appointed to find a successor, but as Whalen noted, Day will be hard to replace. A scholarship fund has been established in his name to help students further aviation careers. Donations can be made to the Boca Raton Airport Authority.

Delray Beach

Progress continues on the barrier island for the city of Delray Beach's reclaimed water system for landscape irrigation. Here, crews are working on Miramar Drive, between A1A and Gleason Street. Motorists are advised to expect delays and be cautious when traveling through this area as temporary lane closures may occur during construction. Work is scheduled for completion by the end of August.

Commission asks judge to undo garbage contract

By Tim Pallesen

Delray Beach commissioners will ask a judge to undo the city's $65 million contract with garbage hauler Waste Management, arguing that it violates a city competitive bidding law.

A previous commission approved the no-bid contract last August.

"Public trust in city hall was fractured by this decision," Mayor Cary Glickstein said before a 4-1 vote on June 18 to seek a declaratory judgment in circuit court to void the contract.

"All of this could have been avoided by just following our ordinances, which are crystal clear," Glickstein said. "This was a terrible decision. It's important for this commission to right that wrong."

Commissioners contracted with Coral Gables government law attorney Jaime Cole to advise whether they could get the judgment.

"I think we have a very significant chance of prevailing, but that's not a guarantee," Cole reported back at the June 18 meeting.

Cole said he knows of no other city that didn't seek competitive bids before contracting with a garbage hauler. Competitive bids are required in Delray Beach for any purchase over $15,000.

"You are required to follow your code," Cole said. "Therefore, you needed to bid this out."

Current Commissioners Adam Frankel and Angeleta Gray had voted to give Waste Management the no-bid contract last August. Sparks flew at the June 18 meeting when Glickstein criticized that vote.

"I don't know whether it was arrogance or stupidity," the mayor said.

"Mr. Mayor, you just called me stupid," Frankel shot back.

"I guess the better word was 'incompetence,'" Glickstein replied.

Frankel was the lone vote against in the commission's 4-1 vote to seek a declaratory judgment to undo the contract.

Commissioners last year justified the no-bid contract by saying that the city has never received a complaint against Waste Management from a resident.

Peter Sachs, an attorney representing Waste Management, stood to say the garbage hauler will argue that its contract is valid.

"It looks like we're heading toward litigation," City Attorney Brian Shutt said. ★

City bent its bidding rules, county says

Delray Beach has clarified its competitive bidding rules after the county Inspector General said the city bent its rules when it awarded its beach-cleaning contract last January.

Universal Beach Services, the city beach cleaner for 30 years, got the contract for $94,896 after arguing that low bidder Beach Raker couldn't provide the service for $57,000.

JoAnn Peart, owner of Universal Beach, also accused the city of giving Beach Raker an unfair advantage in the bidding process by allowing it to use a different method of beach cleaning that can pick up trash as small as cigarette butts and bottle caps.

When the Parks and Recreation Department warned that the super cleaner would also suck up seashells, city commissioners paid $37,896 more to keep Universal Beach on the job.

City Manager Louie Chapman said Delray Beach has complied with the Inspector General's request to clarify the factors including price that determine who gets city contracts. — Tim Pallesen

Parking problems forecast for proposed Trader Joe's location

By Tim Pallesen

The long-awaited Trader Joe's shopping center goes before city commissioners July 9, but still with concerns that shoppers might not have enough parking.

The city's Site Plan Review and Appearance Board on June 12 finally recommended approval for the Delray Place shopping center, on the southeast corner of Linton Boulevard and Federal Highway, after 18 months of controversy and delays.

Trader Joe's is eager to compete with a new Fresh Market under construction across the street.

But SPRAB Chairman Scott Porten, who studied the demand for parking at other Trader Joe's locations, warned that the new Delray Beach location might require more parking spaces than the developer is willing to provide.

"I don't think the parking works," Porten told developer Joe Carosella. "If your center is successful, you will have parking problems."

Board member Rustem Kupi agreed. "Parking is going to be a nightmare," he predicted.

After the meeting, Porten said the highly popular specialty grocer is drawing unexpectedly large crowds wherever it opens.

"When I researched, I learned Trader Joe's is having inadequate-parking problems all over the country," he said.

But Porten, the incoming chairman of the Delray Beach Chamber of Commerce, joined a chorus of business leaders to praise the overall Delray Place project, which also will have Dick's Sporting Goods and several restaurants as tenants.

"This project will kick-start redevelopment on the South Federal Highway corridor," city Economic Development Director Vin Nolan said.

"The developer has done what is prudent and then some," SPRAB board member Jose Aquila said. "I think it's time to say thank you."

"We need to cut to the chase and get this going," said Kelli Freeman, president of the Tropic Isle Homeowners Association.

The Tropic Isle neighborhood had been split over the next-door shopping center, with the closest homeowners objecting to it. But Ron Kolins, the attorney for 12 families who opposed Delray Place, reported June 12 that all but one homeowner now favors the project after negotiations with the developer. "Our issues have been satisfactorily resolved," Kolins said.

The lone holdout, Nancy Schnabel, appealed to the advisory board. "Please help us. This is a real intrusion on our lifestyle," she said.

But her next-door neighbor Steve Michael said Delray Place will improve his quality of life. "These developers are quality guys. This center will be a great addition to our area," Michael said.

The advisory board fussed with the developer over the design that motorists will see at the intersection of Linton and Federal Highway, striving to achieve what city planner Ron Hoggard described as an "importance to the site."

Everyone agreed a fountain with a colonnade and clock tower will do. Trader Joe's and other tenants must post their signs away from the corner. ★

Atlantic Crossing project developer moves truck traffic off Atlantic Ave.

By Tim Pallesen

A new design plan proposed for Atlantic Crossing eliminates truck traffic onto Atlantic Avenue.

Coastal residents had feared that the controversial multiuse project would cause traffic congestion near the bridge. Mayor Cary Glickstein had vowed to vote against the developer's site plan if truck traffic weren't rerouted to Federal Highway.

"We heard loud and clear," project manager Don DeVere said, as the Atlantic Crossing developer presented its redone design to the city on June 25 for approval this summer.

Four architectural firms spent the past six months redesigning the project to appear smaller after city commissioners gave density and height approvals in December. Downtown Delray Beach firm Currie, Sowards, Aguila acted as consulting architect on all the buildings.

"We challenged our design team to return to the drawing board to capture Delray's authentic look and feel," said Jeff Edwards, president of the Edwards Companies, the developer in a joint venture with Rexall founder Carl De Santis.

The new plan proposes six buildings with different architectural styles ranging from Mediterranean to Art Deco.

"Atlantic Crossing will appear to have been built over time, by different hands," local architect Bob Currie said. Terraces, balconies and canopies have been added to soften the appearance.

The $200 million project includes 280 rental apartments, 82 condos, 83,000 square feet of office space and 76,000 square feet of shops and restaurants.

City staff has seven weeks to review the new plan before it goes first to the Site Plan Review and Appearance Board and then to the commission for final approval. ★

The 7 Deadly Mistakes That Will Cost You Thousands When You Sell Your Home This Summer

Palm Beach County - A new report has just been released which reveals 7 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a 9 Step System that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of home sellers don't get what they want for their homes and become disillusioned and - worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their homes on the market.

As this report uncovers, most home sellers make 7 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. The good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable. In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The 9 Step System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar".

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your FREE copy of this report call toll-free 1-800-554-4052 and enter 7000.

office also is filled with other bits of Palm Beach County aviation history, including old flight maps on the wall.

That homespun history probably will change next April when a new company takes over operations at the county's general aviation airport, officially known as Palm Beach County Park Airport. It sits at the northeast corner of Congress Avenue and Lantana Road.

Bids due this month

Bids were originally due June 21, but that was extended to July 19. They will include proposals from companies that attended a mandatory pre-bid meeting in May. The leading contenders are: Landmark Aviation, based in Houston, which operates the Pahokee and Palm Beach Gardens airports and three other Florida airports; Galaxy Aviation, with operations at Palm Beach International and Boca Raton airports and three other Florida airports; and Sheltair Aviation, based in Orlando, which operates the Executive Airport in Fort Lauderdale and 13 others in Florida. No representatives from these companies could be reached for comment.

The county airports department also has requested bids to develop a corner section of that airport property. The airports department wants to rent the vacant land. At the end of the lease, it would take control of the buildings.

Most of the companies that attended the pre-bid meeting to run the Lantana airport also sent representatives to the pre-bid meeting to build a hotel, restaurant, gas station with retail or other commercial project.

Bids for that project also are due on July 19.

Airmotive spent millions

For the current Lantana airport operator, Florida Airmotive, it's the end to the company's lofty place in Palm Beach County aviation history. Owen Gassaway Jr., a fixture in the local aviation community, started that company in 1941.

Since 1975, Florida Airmotive, with the older Gassaway at the helm, has had the ground lease with the county airports department. In 1986, his company secured a 20-year lease with a five-year renewal option.

His company spent millions to turn the airport — oft-described as “the junkyard” because of its decrepit buildings — into a homey showcase that pilots, student pilots and visitors would enjoy.

He died in 2007, and now his only son, Owen Gassaway III, operates Florida Airmotive.

Asked why his company isn't a bidder, he said, “The county was not interested in extending the lease.”

That might be the only common ground between the county's department of airports and Florida Airmotive.

“Florida Airmotive has had the lease for 25 years — an extensive time — now it's time for someone else to get the contract,” said Bruce Pelly, the county's airports director. “It was advertised; anybody who qualifies can put in a bid.”

The county is looking for a good, competent operator, he said. “We're not looking to make changes, we just want to improve it.”

County seeks more revenue

The Lantana airport, with 125,000 takeoffs or landings in 2012, is restricted to fixed-wing aircraft and helicopters; jets are not allowed to land there. It does not have an aircraft control tower, and aircraft follow a voluntary noise-abatement plan. It also does not charge landing fees.

Most of those aircraft operations are touch-and-go landings practiced by student pilots at the three flight schools based at the Lantana airport, Gassaway said.

The county airports department makes money from the Lantana airport in several ways: ground rent, share of the rent charged to tenants in the hangars, a share of the tie-downs and a 5-cent surcharge on fuel used by aircraft.

That totaled $120,000 in the most recent financial year, said Mike Simmons, finance director for the county airports department. (The airports department budget is not part of the county's general fund.)

Starting in April, the department is looking to make $200,000 annually from the hangar rentals, plus an additional $9,487.50 for ground rental of the 14.63 acres, and an additional $10,000-plus from fuel sales (204,430 gallons were sold in 2012), according to its proposal.

It is offering a $2 million rent credit to the new Lantana airport operator to fix or replace the hangars. It had originally offered $1 million but doubled the amount after potential bidders said more money was needed to do the repairs.

The hangar ownership became a contested issue between the county and Florida Airmotive. The county won in court because it had included a standard clause in its lease with Florida Airmotive, saying at the end of the ground lease the improvements would revert to the county.

Gassaway concedes that his company was on the losing end of that litigation, but he adds that the county can't take control of the hangars until his lease runs out in 2014.

His company also contested the designation of the non-airport-use parcel more than 10 years ago, when his dad was still alive. They have a collection of letters from local and government officials saying the land should not be developed in case the airport needs it.

“We might not need it today, or tomorrow, but in the future,” the son said. It's the last piece of open land near the coast that could be used for airport expansion, he said.

The airports department will put a standard clause in the land lease for that 5.99-acre parcel, according to Laura Beebe, deputy director. The clause would state that the parcel may be needed by the Federal Aviation Administration in the future, but she thinks it is unlikely to happen.

School is part of plan

Also at the airport, plans are in the works for a new magnet school, operated by BASA Aeronautics Inc. The nonprofit runs its Aerospace Academy now at the Boynton Beach High School.

It needs work space for high school students and adults to train to be certified jet engine mechanics and airframe technicians, said Paul Hershorn, director of the magnet program and assistant professor at the Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University in Daytona Beach. The foundation has commitments from two people to pay for the $2 million facility, he said. The school still has to work out its lease with the county.

Pilots hope charm remains

Many pilots who use it, including Gottlieb, the ex-Manalapan mayor, and Gary Kosinski of Ocean Ridge, love the Lantana airport.

Since 1999, Kosinski has parked his plane there. The airport's “old charm and simplicity make it one of the nation's wonderfully unique fields,” he said. “The crew at Florida Airmotive and the aircraft and maintenance at Palm Beach Aircraft are second to none.”

Still, he sees the need for significant renovations and upgraded hangar space.

He and the other pilots are hoping the new operator will maintain the old charm while updating the facilities.

As to what Gassaway will be doing next April when his Florida Airmotive turns over the keys to the Lantana airport, he plans to “get in the unemployment line. I hope it still exists.” ★

Ocean Ridge

By Tim O'Meilia

Owners who rent out their single-family homes in Ocean Ridge will now have to register each rental property at Town Hall for $50 annually.

But some residents say the rental registration will do little to discourage short-term rentals in single-family neighborhoods.

“It's not going to do anything to the bad guys,” resident Bernd Schulte told the Town Commission at the June 3 meeting after members voted 4-0 to institute the registration requirement. “The good guys are going to register, but the bad guys aren't. I think you're wasting your time.”

Residents have complained that weekly and even biweekly rentals disrupt single-family neighborhoods and that renters have no investment in the upkeep and security of the neighborhood.

Town law allows homes to be rented for a minimum of 30 days and forbids homes from being occupied by more than five unrelated persons.

The registration law does not apply to apartments or dwellings governed by a condominium association or cooperative.

Violators could be fined up to $250 for a first offense and $500 for further violations. But some residents pointed out that one oceanfront estate rented for $8,000 a week and that a $250 fine would be little deterrent.

“I would really like to see something that carries a strong penalty,” said resident Betty Bingham. She also wants the 30-day rental minimum expanded. “The issue is we're not correcting the problem.”

In March, Police Chief Chris Yannuzzi said 14 complaints of short-term rentals were made, but most at the same property. He said enforcement typically depends on neighbors filing a complaint.

“This is still going to rely on our neighbors to complain,” Commissioner Gail Adams Aaskov said. “This all seems a little ridiculous,” said Debbie Brookes, whose husband, Ed, is a commissioner. “It's only going to be enforced if they register. Basically, this ordinance doesn't have any teeth.”

In other business, the Town Commission:

- Edged toward reversing decades-old plans to phase out the town's only commercial strip, asking Town Manager Ken Schenck to negotiate the cost of a change in the town's comprehensive plan to allow both commercial and residential uses at the 5011 building on North Ocean Boulevard at the town's south border. The two-story, five-store and four-apartment property is scheduled to become residential-only in July 2014. Building owner Lisa Sivitilli agreed to bring plans to spruce up the strip for continued commercial use. The building houses a barber shop, real estate office, a triathlon shop, The Coastal Star and an empty store. The plan changes could cost $10,000.

- Approved spending $213,000 from town reserves for drainage repairs to the Inlet Cay cul-de-sac.

- Tentatively approved, by a 3-1 vote, a $1,000 bonus to retiring police Sgt. Eve Eubanks. Commissioner Ed Brookes said the bonus violates a policy set by the commission two years ago to give $100 bonuses for each year after 20 years to retiring employees. Eubanks was a 15-year employee. ★

Scala began to conduct the search in a methodical manner, using guidelines from the United States Lifesaving Association. His Ocean Rescue staff belongs to the group known for its high physical membership standards.

First, Scala talked with Normil's friend.

"I needed to be certain he was in the water and where he went under," Scala said. He had been part of two other searches where the missing swimmer was found to be alive — and on land. The exact place Normil was last seen determined a starting point for the search.

After speaking with the friend, Scala saw the head of the rip current where Normil was last seen. Not a strong swimmer, the Boynton Beach teen likely panicked when the rip current pulled him away from the beach.

Scala looked to the ocean to check the water's visibility and the current direction. On May 31, the ocean was choppy, diminishing visibility to zero. The 10- to 15-mph winds from the east created perfect conditions for rip currents.

Ocean Rescue staff would later call the conditions that day "the worst possible" for a search.

Scala next organized his staff to do a grid search. He stayed on the beach, watching his team execute the search. He received periodic updates from his line leader, Justin Rumbaugh.

He put down a marker on the beach, lining up with the spot where Normil was last seen in the ocean. Rumbaugh, with four years' experience in Delray Beach, then reviewed the grid pattern with the other lifeguards.

The line leader is picked usually because he can talk the loudest to his teammates in the ocean.

The person also knows the USLA hand signals, such as when a guard swims 10 strokes underwater, resurfaces and touches his head: That means the guard is OK.

The poor visibility forced the guards to swim close together when doing the search.

The Ocean Rescue staff had to close one of its beaches to swimming when it sent two guards via an ATV to help with the search, about 3 miles north of the city's beaches. The other guards who assisted the search in its early minutes were Justin Walton and Rafael Costa, both with two years' full-time experience in Delray Beach.

When Rumbaugh as the line leader told the guards where to turn, they realigned and swam perpendicular to the direction they were just swimming, using the same grid pattern. Then they switched and swam back in the opposite direction until they passed the point where Normil was last seen, about 250 feet out in the ocean. That way, every area was searched.

"I am really proud of the staff," Scala said. "Even when there was a break to review the search pattern and a beachgoer brought them some water to drink, no one took it. They just wanted to get back to searching for Normil."

Despite the precise, coordinated effort, the body of the young swimmer was not recovered.

Training and teamwork

Twice a year for a full month, Delray trains its lifeguards in the USLA search and recovery method, said Eric Feld, an operations supervisor. The guards train in the classroom and the ocean three to four times a week for one hour during that training month.

In May, Ocean Rescue staff had just refreshed their search and recovery skills, he said. Ocean Rescue lifeguards also are emergency medical technicians, said Scala, who has worked at the city division for 10 years.

The May 31 grid search was truly a multi-agency effort, he said.

Delray Beach guards were joined by three from Palm Beach County Ocean Rescue. Mark Rodrick, a 15-year veteran with the county, came down from Ocean Inlet Park to help. Two guards, Cathy Conlin and Michael Soutter, arrived from nearby Gulfstream Park. Both have 29 years of lifeguarding experience.

The poor visibility underwater made goggles useless, Scala said. The guards needed only flippers and buoy markers. When they could no longer feel the bottom, they dived under until they could and then resurfaced, looking back and lining themselves up with the team.

Delray Beach later sent two more guards up to the search effort. They were Luigi Pratt with seven years' experience and Kyle Stewart with more than two years' experience as city lifeguards.

"They executed the search and worked as a team. Scala said. "All that training pays off. ... It was physically demanding."

Through an agreement with the town of Gulf Stream, Delray Beach Fire-Rescue handles the town's emergency calls. Fire-Rescue was in charge of the call when it first went out as a missing swimmer, Capt. Curtis Jackson said.

The department had its entire special ops unit, Fire Station 5 and a battalion chief on the beach, he said. Two of its paramedics, Tyler Adams and Mark Szejter, aided Ocean Rescue in search, along with Phil Wotton, district captain with Palm Beach County Ocean Rescue.

About 3:15 p.m., when the missing swimmer call became a search and recovery mission, the U.S. Coast Guard took control.

It sent a helicopter from Miami, an 87-foot cutter from the Fort Pierce Inlet and a boat from the Lake Worth Inlet, according to Petty Officer Mark Barney.

The helicopter had a four-person crew: two pilots, a swimmer and a mechanic. One pilot flew the helicopter in a rectangular spiral pattern while the three others visually searched their assigned quadrants, so that no area of the ocean was missed, Barney said.

On an overcast day, the helicopter flies a few hundred feet above the ocean. The crew twice reported seeing something in the water that the Ocean Rescue lifeguards used to redirect their search.

Unfortunately, they never found Normil.

His body probably met with one of two outcomes.

The littoral drift or longshore current comes close to the shore in that area of Florida, according to John Fletemeyer, a lifeguard turned sea turtle monitor and coastal researcher at Florida International University.

"So possibly the teen's body was carried up the coast," he said.

When a person drowns, his lungs empty, dropping the body to the ocean floor, he said. After a few days, it fills with gases and the body floats to the surface.

The other possibility is even more grim: "The sharks [may have] got to it," he said.

Rip currents are the No. 1 problem at the beach, according to Fletemeyer. "One hundred fifty people die annually in rip currents, making them more serious than shark bites or lightning strikes," he said.

Fletemeyer and the other lifeguards said Normil's disappearance serves as a cautionary reminder for ocean enthusiasts: Always swim near a lifeguard. ★

Manalapan

Commissioners back down for now from seawall standards

By Tim O'Meilia

Manalapan town commissioners backed away from proposed seawall standards that would require all seawalls be able to withstand a storm as strong as Hurricane Andrew.

Prompted by the collapse of ocean seawalls when Hurricane Sandy passed off shore last year, the regulations would require that seawalls along the ocean or the Intracoastal Waterway built in 2010 or earlier be certified by a coastal engineer as able to withstand a once-in-50-years storm.

The seawalls would have to be certified within three months and then every five years. Seawalls built in 2011 or later are presumed to be sound and must be recertified every 15 years.

"You're putting an obligation on nearly everyone in town to certify every five years," said Ken Kaleel, representing oceanfront developer Stewart Satter. "How much is that going to cost a resident? You're asking an engineer to certify work he did not do."

Kaleel said town officials did not consider the ramifications and cost in developing the new rules. "If it fails (certification), what's the cost of fixing it?" he said.

The new rules were based on those used by the town of Palm Beach and on advice from the town's consulting engineering firm, Taylor Engineering.

"The whole reason for this is when we left it up to the residents without oversight from the town, we had no way to deal with someone who is not as diligent," said Mayor

David Cheifetz. "If one fails, it can affect others."

Commissioner John Murphy said he would not vote for the new standards until a coastal engineer testified to the commission. Commissioner Lou DeStefano has opposed the town's setting the standards.

The standards would require that new seawalls be at least 13.3 feet above sea level. It also sets standards for thickness, length and depth beneath the sand.

Commissioners postponed a decision until July.

In other business, commissioners:

- Agreed to pay Cielo Madera Land Trust $120,000 to settle a lawsuit over building permit fees. The town refused to refund any of $158,000 in permit fees for a planned home at 1020 S. Ocean Blvd.

in 2010 because it was not allowed in town ordinances. The house was never built. The settlement reflects fees for demolition inspection and town administrative costs.

- Approved tentatively a change in building permit regulations to allow fee refunds when buildings are not constructed: 100 percent if applied for within 30 days, 70 percent within 60 days and 30 percent within 90 days. The Cielo Madera Land Trust would not have qualified for a refund because it had not been sought within three months' time.

- Learned that replacing asbestos cement water pipes on Point Manalapan and along 1,200 feet of A1A would add $651,000 to a project already being designed. Asbestos in water is not considered a health hazard. The Mock Roos &

Associates engineering firm is designing a $3 million upgrade of the town's water lines along much of A1A and along U.S. 1 in Hypoluxo, which buys water from the town. The lines did not meet water pressure standards for firefighting.

- Refused to allow Commissioner Howard Roder to read a statement about discrepancies in police officer Wayne Shepherd's employment record. Instead, Roder's remarks will be attached to the minutes of the meeting.

Roder and Mayor David Cheifetz argued over the issue. "Wait, I said. Be quiet!" Cheifetz said, interrupting Roder's reading. He said the document will be "put into the record." "I'm going to read it," Roder said later. "No, you're not," the mayor said. ★

Noise rules undergoing change

By Tim Pallesen

Coastal residents will be spared louder downtown music under a compromise noise ordinance that three city commissioners say they will vote to approve.

Restaurants on Atlantic Avenue west of Federal Highway would get an extra hour of louder music on Friday and Saturday nights under the compromise.

"We're carving out an area where it's OK to be a little louder," said Assistant City Attorney Janice Rustin, after commissioners gave her directions at a June 11 workshop to rewrite the existing noise law.

The existing law allows police to issue a violation for any noise anywhere in the city that the officer believes is unreasonably loud, excessive or unnecessary.

The new law would make it easier to tone down late-night noise by outlawing any sound that is plainly audible from 100 feet away after 11 p.m.

Downtown restaurant owners asked commissioners for a waiver from the 11 p.m. curfew until 1 a.m. on weekends. Residents who live near Atlantic Avenue have opposed it.

"We're striving for a balance that protects the vibrancy of the downtown and also lets residents maintain their quality of life," Community Improvement Director Lulu Butler told commissioners before the workshop.

Mayor Cary Glickstein and Commissioners Shelly Petrolia and Angeleta Gray agreed to give restaurants and bars between Federal Highway and Swinton Avenue until midnight on weekends before the tougher noise law takes effect.

Ocean Properties, the owner of the Marriott Hotel, Boston's on the Beach and the Sandbar, opposes establishing a downtown entertainment district with less stringent restraints.

But commissioners said the noise law needs to be more protective for residents who live east of Federal Highway near Atlantic Avenue and Ocean Boulevard nightspots. "There are single-family homes in the marina district and east of the Intracoastal," Glickstein said. "A one-size-fits-all solution is not workable there."

"The central downtown core is different from the beachside," Commissioner Al Jacquet agreed. "We need to tailor this to protect those single-family homes."

Jacquet and Commissioner Adam Frankel support allowing restaurants west of Federal to play music until 1 a.m.

Commissioners might revisit what is appropriate for Ocean Properties. "A beach hotel is a tourist destination with different requirements and concerns," Glickstein said. ★

Budget talks begin with capital expenses

By Tim O'Meilia

Manalapan streets would have new street and traffic signs, the Town Hall new air conditioners and upgraded computer software, the police a new patrol car and town employees a 3 percent raise under a preliminary budget being considered by town commissioners.

But sidewalks wouldn't be repaired next year, and a $25,000 emergency generator for Town Hall would be put off another year.

Bottom line, the budget would be $80,000 more than this year's $3.3 million.

Although commissioners haven't yet seen how much revenue the town can expect in the budget year beginning Oct. 1, they met in a budget workshop on expenses June 24, the first of several monthly workshops this summer. The next is at 10 a.m. on July 22.

Town Manager Linda Stumpf said the salary increase matches the amount that Ocean Ridge, Highland Beach and Jupiter Island will be considering. Workers got a 3.5 percent raise this year.

Police will receive a 2 percent boost and another 3 percent in October 2014 under a union contract approved in January. They also got 7 percent retroactive to 2011 and 3 percent this year.

The commission dealt largely with capital expenses, focusing mainly on how to manage the fleet of police cars. Police now have four patrol cars plus cars for the lieutenant and chief. The town manager also has an assigned car.

Commissioner John Murphy suggested a five-patrol-car rotation to reduce wear by giving the manager's car to the chief or lieutenant. The manager is entitled to a car or a $400 monthly allowance.

Police Chief Carmen Mattox proposed that the lieutenant drive whichever of the five cars isn't on the road. Commissioners instructed Stumpf to calculate which method is cheaper. The commission wants to maintain a schedule of replacing a patrol car every year.

The commission did not consider Commissioner Howard Roder's suggestion to cut the police budget by $200,000. Roder said that erroneous crime statistics prompted the commission to add a lieutenant, a clerical worker and part-time beach patrol officers.

"All that money was based on fear of crime stats that were not there," he said. Roder has argued that town officials labeled routine traffic stops as criminal offenses to inflame residents' concerns.

Stumpf said the lieutenant position was already in the budget and that the clerical position was not filled.

"I think we responded to the needs of the residents on A1A with respect to the beach," said Mayor David Cheifetz. "I think those beach patrols' whole purpose is to make our residents feel safe."

The $7,500 allotted for new street signs may be an attempt to keep up with the Joneses — or the Lantanas. "Lantana's signs are much nicer than ours," said Commissioner Tom Thornton. "Ours are faded, falling down and ugly." ★

Proposals for old library site in pipeline

By Betty Wells

Luxury movie theaters and hotels are included in four development proposals for the old library property on Southeast Fourth Avenue in downtown Delray Beach.

Details about the proposals submitted to the Community Redevelopment Agency are not public until they are scrutinized, then presented to the CRA board, said CRA Assistant Director Jeff Costello.

Costello said, though, that three of the plans offer hotels and two include movie theaters.

"One has a boutique hotel, and the other two are larger," he said of the proposals.

The CRA owns the 1.57 acres where the old library building still stands. The entire development site is within the East Atlantic Avenue Central Business District. The site is about 170 feet south of Atlantic Avenue and is bordered by Southeast Fourth Avenue on the west and Southeast Fifth Avenue on the east.

A representative of IPic Theaters confirmed that it submitted a proposal. The company opened a high-end theater last year in Mizner Park in Boca Raton.

Kevin Warner, a Delray Beach resident who said he keeps an eye on what the city spends and does, said his only concern about potential developers would be whether parking would be adequate for what's built.

"I would love to have a movie theater that I could walk to downtown," said the public schoolteacher. "As long as the project that goes into that location has adequate parking, I'm all for it. And I would certainly hope the project is 100 percent financed by the private sector."

The deadline for the proposals was June 21.

Costello said that the projects will be assessed for financial feasibility. He said the planned schedule for action would be presenting the proposals to the CRA board on July 25. ★ hotel in Manalapan is because we had a Ritz-Carlton, a brand everybody knew and everyone understood what that brand was," he said.

At the heart of Diamond's concerns — and those of other residents, including Mayor David Cheifetz — is the future of the La Coquille Club at the hotel.

In an unusual arrangement, the town approved the construction of the Ritz on the oceanfront site of the decades-old La Coquille Club under the condition that a club be maintained at the resort for the use of town residents.

In recent years, resident-members have complained that private-member lockers had been used by resort guests, a promised steam room is only a steam shower, food and service at the club has deteriorated and a 20 percent summer dining discount was discontinued, among other things.

Eva Hill, president of Britannia Pacific Properties, which owns RC/PB, met with interested town residents in late June and spoke at the commission meeting.

"We don't anticipate any changes to (resident) rights to use the club and access in and out of the property," Hill said, adding that the owners were considering adding 15 nonresident members to the club. Unlike residents, nonresident members pay a fee to belong. Club board member Kathryn Diamond — the former mayor's wife — estimated that there are 25 to 35 nonresident members.

"It is our extreme desire to bring the La Coquille Club back to the vibrant club your members want to enjoy," Hill told the commission.

She said the locker sharing has ended. The hotel is considering offering special party and event packages to members, and the dining discount would be re-examined.

Hill said she already has met with club board members Kathryn Diamond and Chauncey Johnstone, who is also a town commissioner.

RC/PB must seek an amendment to the PUD in coming months because of the management change.

"It needs to include safeguards so we don't find ourselves in the same position, being asked to rubber-stamp changes after the fact," Basil Diamond said.

"What if another group comes in? We need safeguards so it doesn't become a Motel 6 or a Ramada," he added.

Cheifetz asked Basil Diamond to sit on a committee that will negotiate the revised PUD. "I want to assure everyone that this commission will be looking out for the town's interest," the mayor said.

"What we really want is a first-class luxury hotel with our La Coquille Club in it," Basil Diamond said.

As for the name of the hotel, Hill said it was titled Eau Palm Beach to capitalize on the brand equity of the Eau spa, built at the resort in 2009. "The name is now recognized as quality," she said. "We didn't want to go with just another household brand."

Said Commissioner Howard Roder: "With everyone talking about the name change, you're getting a lot of free publicity." ★

Briny Breezes

Town renews police contract with Ocean Ridge department

By Tim O'Meilia

Ocean Ridge police will be patrolling the narrow streets of Briny Breezes, checking for unlocked doors and writing tickets for illegal parking at the beach for another three years.

The Briny Breezes Town Council unanimously approved a new three-year contract June 27 for police services with its northerly neighbor. Ocean Ridge was the only agency to bid on the contract, although the town invited bids from Delray Beach, Boynton Beach, Gulf Stream and the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office.

Briny will pay Ocean Ridge $203,500 the first year, $18,500 more than under the current contract. The cost will increase 1.5 percent per year plus any rise in the consumer price index. The new agreement goes into effect Oct. 1.

"I think it's fair and equitable," said Alderman Peter Fingerhut.

"I appreciate your confidence in us for the past three years," Ocean Ridge Town Manager Ken Schenck told the council.

In other business, the council:

- Agreed to a new contract with Hi-Byrd Inspections that calls for an increase in permit review and inspection fee costs. The council asked the town attorney to draft a new inspection fee schedule that increases permit applications from $60 to $85 and sets individual inspection fees of $85. Currently, the $60 fee covers all inspections but the town pays additional fees for multiple inspections that it does not recoup from residents.

- Set budget workshops for July 11 and 12 at 1 p.m. The July 25 regular meeting was canceled because the council will lack a quorum. ★

Judge rules town can proceed in efforts to wipe out protest paintings

By Thomas R. Collins

The town of Gulf Stream can move forward with its efforts to get resident Martin O'Boyle's murals of protest off his waterfront home, a federal judge has ruled.

O'Boyle

O'Boyle filed an emergency request to stop the proceedings, saying his free-speech rights were being violated.

But U.S. District Judge Donald Middlebrooks said O'Boyle hadn't shown that he was likely to succeed at trial — one of the criteria required for O'Boyle's request to be granted.

"At this stage ... I don't think there's been a likelihood of success on the merits shown," Middlebrooks said after an hourlong hearing. "Let me encourage you to settle if you are talking about settling it."

The ruling doesn't mean the town wins the case, only that its code-enforcement proceedings can move ahead, and that the court case will go on as it would have without O'Boyle's emergency request.

O'Boyle has been at odds with the town since town officials turned down his request to remodel his $1.6 million home, a project including a 25-foot entryway. O'Boyle says the decision not to grant him a variance for the project was unjust.

The next thing the town knew, a dazzling display of insulting paintings covered his home.

And the next thing O'Boyle knew, he was being cited for code violations, with the town saying the paintings amount to unauthorized signs, that they include colors not on the town's approved list, and that they didn't go through the proper review process.

And the next thing the town knew, it was being sued in federal court.

In testimony at the hearing, O'Boyle said the town's rejection of his remodeling project has been a hardship. "I hate to use the word 'horrible,' but it's been horrible," O'Boyle said. "Our house is uninsurable at this point." He said the windows would have to be boarded up. "They turned down a beautiful retrofit of a home."

The point of the paintings? "It's my opinion that they're out of control, and what I did was lampoon them," O'Boyle said from the witness stand. "We ridiculed them, that's what we did."

O'Boyle's attorneys — who included his son, Jonathan, who came down from Philadelphia to make the case — argued that the combination of the town's ordinances on signage, on the use of paint, and on its review process, unconstitutionally limit speech. Any signs other than real estate signs have to be approved by a review board, according to town ordinances. They said town officials would not be inclined to approve any sign of protest.

Joanne O'Connor of West Palm Beach, representing the town, argued that even if the sign ordinance was found to be unconstitutional — which they say it is not — the paint ordinance is constitutional, so O'Boyle's paintings wouldn't be allowed under those rules.

Town attorneys also said it was too early for O'Boyle to have a court-worthy grievance because a magistrate has not yet ruled that O'Boyle is, in fact, in violation of town codes.

Middlebrooks said "it looks like the sign ordinance might have some problems, frankly," in terms of limiting free speech, but in the end it wasn't enough for him to grant O'Boyle's request.

Town Attorney Skip Randolph said, "We believe the judge was right in his decision." And he said he's "always hopeful" for settlements in court cases.

In the two weeks after the hearing, the town has filed a motion to dismiss the case and no settlement talks have been held.

"There's nothing scheduled," Randolph said.

O'Boyle's attorney, Robert Gersham of Delray Beach, said he's asked the court for more time to respond to the motion to dismiss, so that the actual code-enforcement hearing can be held. It has not been scheduled yet.

Meanwhile, O'Boyle has erected four signs — not paintings on his house. One says "Mayor Orthwein is a BLONDE" "that says it all." And another: "Town Mgr. Thrasher is a" followed by a picture of a juggling clown.

O'Boyle was not optimistic about a settlement possibility.

"From my point of view, it's something I would love to see settled," he said. "But if you want to punch me in the face, the chances of you and I settling aren't very good. The town clearly wants to fight." ★

Town looks to renew trash removal contract

By Tim O'Meilie

Gulf Stream will try to renew its long-running contract for garbage pickup without seeking competitive bids.

Town commissioners agreed with Town Manager William Thrasher's recommendation to negotiate a new contract with Waste Management Inc., which has picked up residential garbage and recyclable materials in the town for more than 10 years.

"Their service has been excellent," said Commissioner Robert Ganger. "I believe they train their people well."

Commissioners voted 3-0 to have the mayor and town manager try to make a new agreement. Commissioners Garrett Dering and Muriel Anderson were absent.

The current five-year contract with Waste Management expires Sept. 30. The town pays $140,000 annually.

Thrasher said Waste Management responds quickly to complaints.

"I recommend what I know works, what I'm familiar with," he told commissioners.

At least six other Palm Beach County cities, including Highland Beach and Delray Beach, have negotiated trash-hauling contracts recently without seeking competitive bids. Gulf Stream has had inquiries from other companies. After a turnover on its commission, however, Delray Beach is trying to void its deal and seek bids.

"It is true we might get a better price, but what we can't verify is the level of service," Thrasher said.

If Gulf Stream commissioners are unhappy with the terms of the new contract, they could seek bids later.

The town has no policy on when to seek competitive bids and never has sought bids for garbage pickup, said Town Clerk Rita Taylor.

When the town discontinued its own trash collection decades ago, the town signed on with County Sanitation, the only major hauler in the area then. County Sanitation was later sold to another firm and then to Waste Management.

In other business, commissioners:

- Learned that bids for phase one of the $5.5 million utility burial project are due July 16 and the commission will be able to award a contract at its August meeting. Construction could start in September. The bid specifications include installation of 22 viper-headed street lights along A1A between Golfview Road and Pelican Lane and four 12-foot lantern-style street lights on interior streets.

- Approved unanimously the division of a 4.7-acre parcel at 1410 N. Ocean Blvd. into three lots and the demolition of a garage and shed. Owner Ralph MacDonald agreed to a drainage plan and to maintenance of a 25-foot-wide landscape buffer with neighbors Billy and Shelly Himmelrich. ★

Anderson seat now occupied by neighbor White

By Tim O'Meilie

In 2012, the town of Gulf

White

Stream had two of the longest-serving elected officials in Palm Beach County.

William Koch was in his 47th year as mayor when he died last year, and Vice Mayor Joan Orthwein is in her 18th as a town commissioner.

A year later, Gulf Stream has one of the least experienced commissions on the southeast Florida coast. Now, three of the five members have less than a year's experience in office, one has 18 months and none has ever won a town election.

Neither, for that matter, has Orthwein, who is now mayor.

On June 14, commissioners chose resident Donna White to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Muriel "Mert" Anderson.

"I'm not coming in with any agenda," White said. "There will be a learning curve."

Join the crew on the learning curve boat. Bob Ganger and Tom Stanley were appointed last August. Garrett Dering was appointed in October 2011. The four green appointees replaced three commissioners who moved away and Koch.

Anderson, who served eight years on the commission, sold her Place au Soleil home, resigned May 24 and moved to Vero Beach.

Commissioners voted to replace her with White, another resident of Place au Soleil, a small enclave of Gulf Stream located across the Intracoastal Waterway on the mainland.

"I know we don't have (commission) districts, but I really like having someone from Place au Soleil," said Commissioner Bob Ganger.

"I've heard nothing but compliments about her," Orthwein said.

White, a former member of the town's Architectural Review and Planning Board, was the only resident to show interest in the unpaid job. Despite an ad on the town's new website, no one else applied.

She said Anderson told her she might be a good fit for the job, considering her experience as an ARPB member. White, a 10-year resident of Gulf Stream, will complete the remaining nine months of Anderson's term.

"It's harder and harder to get people to volunteer for positions," White said. ★

Fishing pier nearly done; bridge on schedule

By Tim O'Meilie

The new, $32 million East Ocean Avenue bridge is two-thirds complete, and fishermen can relax. The fishing pier planned beneath the west side of bridge is finished except for the railings.

The $400,000 fishing pier was a late addition to the project.

Construction is a bit further along on the west side of the bridge where contractor GLF Construction of Miami is using Sportsman's and Bicentennial parks as staging areas. The bridge approach on the west side has been poured and sidewalk construction is in progress, said Kristine Frazell-Smith, Palm Beach County's project engineer on the job.

Drainage has been installed, retaining walls to both the east and west approaches have been built and three deck spans of the bridge have been poured. The east and west bascule piers have been completed, and steel erection on the west bascule span is finished.

The new bridge will be 11

Ocean Avenue bridge construction, photographed facing west, shows the expanse of the project. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star feet higher than its 62-year-old predecessor. Although it will still be two lanes, the bridge will be wider, with broader driving lanes as well as bicycle and pedestrian lanes. It will allow for 40 percent fewer bridge openings for boats.

"The project is currently at approximately 66 percent complete and remains on schedule," said Frazell-Smith.

That means a late

November or early December opening, barring hurricanes and other catastrophes.

Mayor David Stewart says he expects the bridge will open around the first week in December and that the town budget includes $25,000 for fireworks and a bridge reopening party.

"It only happens once every 60 years, after all," Stewart said. ★

South Palm Beach

Council OKs new sign code, but keeps last word

By Tim O'Meilie

Condominium entrance sign lettering and logos may be a bit larger under South Palm Beach's new sign code, but Town Council members insist on being the deciders on variances.

The council agreed to revamp the code at its June 25 meeting, including giving the Architectural Review Board the responsibility for reviewing exceptions, but wants to keep final decision-making for itself.

"This is the meeting most people come to. Let the council make the final decision," said council member Stella Jordan.

The change would have transferred jurisdiction for the sign code from the Planning Board to the Architectural Review Board but given the board final say on sign variance requests.

"The last place should be the council," Mayor Donald Clayman said. The other council members agreed.

The change allows a maximum 18-square-foot sign with logos and capital letters no larger than 13 inches and street numbers 10 inches tall. Previously, 8 inches was the maximum letter height, prompting the council to give a variance to the Tuscany condominium earlier this year.

In other business:

- Approved a $22,050 budget for the town's annual music and lecture series. The lectures will run from January to early April, with seven talks, one more than this year. The topics will include world affairs, the Middle East, human behavior and humor in the news. Six performances will be featured in the music series, including pianist Yoko Sata Kothari and five programs arranged by Robert Sharon. Season tickets for each series will remain at $70.

- Approved a $1,500 donation to the town of Lantana for its $25,000 Fourth of July fireworks and celebration.

- Agreed to repay the town's reserve fund $25,000 from the $34,000 settlement of a lawsuit over sewage fees charged by Lake Worth for operating the regional sewage treatment system. ★

Town won't challenge sober house semantics

By Mary Thurwachter

As in many other municipalities, sober houses have been infiltrating Lantana neighborhoods, often to the chagrin of neighbors. In an effort to regulate sober houses — group homes (but not treatment facilities) for recovering addicts — the Town Council, at its June 24 meeting, considered changing the definition of "family."

But after discussion, the council decided to take no action on the matter.

The measure probably would have been little, if any, help in discouraging the onslaught of sober houses, Town Attorney Max Lohman said, adding that, at best, it would be a sideways move.

"Federal law trumps state law and trumps town law," he said. "This area is best left alone because it is an indefensible position. Sober houses are covered under the Americans with Disabilities Act, and courts have routinely struck down regulations in other municipalities as discriminatory."

Council members acknowledged that an effort to redefine "family" was not likely to help.

"Other cities who tried to fight this (in court) have lost their britches," said Councilwoman Lynn Moorhouse. "We should take the advice of our attorney."

State Sen. Jeff Clemens, who happened to be at the meeting to give a legislative update, weighed in on the issue. He said he was working on more oversight for sober houses and had introduced a bill to require that the Department of Children and Families license sober houses and prevent them from being within 1,000 feet of each other. But his bill never made it out of committee.

Clemens said he was able to get state money to finance a study on how many sober houses there are in Florida.

"Hopefully, we'll know how many there are," he said. "We need to get a handle on this."

At the town's May meeting, property owners who live near the proposed sober house at 118 N. Oak Ave. (near the Ocean Avenue shopping district) turned out to oppose the sober house. They delivered a petition with 300 signatures of residents who worried about an increase in crime and a downturn in property values if recovering addicts moved into the neighborhood. The discussion on what defines "family" came about as a result of that conversation.

In other action, the Town Council:

- Held its first budget workshop on June 10 and scheduled the next one for 5:30 p.m. July 22. The town has kept the same tax rate — $3.24 per $1,000 of assessed value — for the past 11 years.

- Delayed until November a decision on whether to allow the Lantana Historical Society a chance to turn a dilapidated, town-owned triplex at 111-115 Prospect Road into a museum. The house needs extensive renovations, including a new roof, electrical wiring, doors and windows.

Council members expressed concerns that the Historical Society may not be able to generate the necessary money to undertake and maintain the project. ★

Edward Ernesto Iacobucci

By Emily J. Minor

DELRAY BEACH — Insiders often called him “the nicest guy in the room.” But Edward Ernesto Iacobucci was also known as the visionary who had the nerve to leave IBM in 1989 and develop computer technology that would lead to a collaboration with Microsoft — and turn his brainchild, Citrix Systems, into a $3.5 billion company.

Mr. Iacobucci, who had lived in coastal Delray Beach for many years with his wife, Nancy, — often an integral part of his business negotiations — died June 21 after a 16-month battle with pancreatic cancer. He was 59.

Considered a free spirit in a regimented techie world, Mr. Iacobucci had the rare combination of incredible people skills and IT foresight, say those who knew him. One British writer wrote after Mr. Iacobucci’s death that the Citrix founder was “almost always” the smartest guy in the room but “always listened to what you had to say.”

After leaving IBM in 1989 over developmental differences, Mr. Iacobucci and his team of determined defectors threw $3 million in development money into OS/2, eventually developing a Windows multiuser version that finally drew the attention of the Bill Gates gang.

Mr. Iacobucci then negotiated collaboration with Microsoft that still exists. Today, Citrix operates in 50 locations worldwide.

Vicky Harris, marketing director of a later Ed Iacobucci start-up company, VirtualWorks, was with Mr. Iacobucci during the early Citrix years. “He inspired people,” she said, simply. “I call it drinking the Kool-Aid, because — from an employee standpoint — when you came to work, you weren’t working. You were changing the world.”

Harris said Mr. Iacobucci was always one to follow his instincts, even when they took him away from the mainstream. “If everyone’s zigging, he’s going to zag,” she said. As his 1989 resignation letter to IBM, he simply handed his bosses a copy of Robert Frost’s poem, “The Road Not Taken.” The boat he used to take to the Bahamas is called “Tenacity.”

Born Sept. 26, 1953, in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Mr. Iacobucci was the son of a biochemist who moved his family to the United States in 1960 to work for E.R. Squibb & Sons. Later, when his father began working for Coca-Cola, Mr. Iacobucci was mentored by former Coca-Cola Chairman Roberto Goizueta. Mr. Iacobucci said often that both men — his father and Goizueta — had strongly influenced his business acumen.

Mr. Iacobucci’s mother, Costantina, is still living.

Although Mr. Iacobucci left Citrix in 2000 to launch other companies, Citrix CEO Mark Templeton said the company would “carry his wondrous torch forward.”

“Ed’s spirit of entrepreneurship, creativity, passion and persistence will always remain at the core of Citrix,” Templeton said.

Besides his wife, Mr. Iacobucci’s three children and three grandchildren also survive him, in addition to his brother, Billy.

Marcelino Solis Jr.

By Emily J. Minor

BRINY BREEZES — After a lifetime career at IBM and many years helping to raise four children, Marcelino Solis Jr. found his final days of peace and quiet on a porch at the end of a road.

“My dad had reached a state of what he called contentfulness,” said Karolyn Baumgartner, Solis’ daughter. “Every day at about 4, he’d go down and sit on the Briny Breezes porch.”

He’d watch the sky, and the pelicans. (The beach was their airport runway, he said.) He’d chat with the neighbors. Baumgartner said her father and her mother, Marie, had discovered the small-town joys of Briny about 13 years ago.

Mr. Solis was 80 when he died June 1 of complications of multiple myeloma at Bethesda East Hospital.

Born in New York City on Jan 12, 1933, Mr. Solis was a veteran of the U.S. Air Force. An engineer, he spent 25 years with IBM at the East Fishkill, N.Y., operations until he retired in 1991.

A lover of small-town life, Mr. Solis and his family lived in the small New York hamlet of Hopewell Junction for more than 40 years.

In his later years, Mr. Solis loved giving more attention to the things that eluded him during the years of work and family. An avid history buff, Baumgartner said her father enjoyed woodworking, music, puttering around the house, drinking scotch and reading. He also enjoyed his seven grandchildren.

Mr. Solis was buried June 8 in Hopewell Junction.

Surviving him are Baumgartner, of Bethel, Conn.; his wife, Marie; and three other children: Christopher Solis, of Richfield, Ohio; Margaret Solis, of Kansas City, Mo.; and Jeanny Busacca, of Orlando, Fla.

The family asks that any memorial donations be made to the American Cancer Society.

Along the Coast

Don’t wait for storm warning to start trimming trees

By Tim O’Meilia

Most coastal residents won’t have to flee to higher ground when a mere Category 1 hurricane approaches under the year-old evacuation rules — except, of course, those mobile home folks in Briny Breezes.

But, staying home during a Big Blow poses other concerns. Such as: How do you keep the lights? While more and more coastal towns are putting their power, telephone and cable TV lines underground, plenty haven’t found the cash to do it in these not-quite post-Great Recession times.

So the answer is: Keep your lush, shady gumbo limbo branches away from power lines so gale-force winds won’t collapse your vegetation onto the electric lines and force you into kerosene lamp mode.

Florida Power & Light, not to mention AT&T and Comcast, have further advice: Trim your trees now before the storm watches begin.

While FPL hires line-clearing contractors to keep their overheads clear, AT&T and Comcast, not so much.

“We clear all our main distribution lines every three years and neighborhood lines every six years,” said FPL spokesman Greg Brostowicz. Main lines are the ones that run down A1A. Neighborhood lines run down your street.

But here’s the catch: “We will only prune or trim branches and limbs that can potentially cause safety hazards and power outages falling on power lines during bad weather,” Brostowicz said.

That means FPL will trim only trees very close to its lines. It isn’t going to be your tree-trimmer on retainer. If you really want peace of mind and you don’t want the cable to go out, you’ll have to trim your close-but-not-too-close vegetation yourself.

Or, better yet, as FPL suggests, hire a pro. FPL uses “utility-qualified” Asplundh Tree Expert Co. and Lewis Tree Service, but there are others.

“There’s two important points to remember. First, if you’re going to have your trees trimmed, do it prior to a hurricane warning because that’s when trash pickup is stopped and there will be no one to pick up the trimmings,” Brostowicz said.

“Second, don’t try to trim near power lines yourself. Hire a professional who is licensed and specially trained to trim near power lines.”

FPL has much more information, including videos and frequently asked questions, at its website, fpl.com/trees.

If you’re convinced a tree limb is posing an imminent threat to a power line, log on to your online FPL account and click “Tree Trimming” on the left.

Or call 800-4OUTAGE (800-468-8243). ★

10 Questions

MEET YOUR NEIGHBOR: Gerald Bregman

Like many members of what Tom Brokaw calls America's Greatest Generation, Gerald Bregman never felt compelled to discuss his years in the service, including a stint as a prisoner of war.

Even when he returned home in 1945 after the war had ended, Bregman didn't share a lot of details with his parents. Later, during a successful business career, Bregman hardly spoke about the war, keeping many of the specifics tucked far away from his wife and two sons.

But at 88, Bregman tells the story of his years in the Army with the same pride he has in the medals that he earned decades ago but just received a few years back. He had written to the military asking for the medallions that were overlooked during the chaos following troops' return from Europe.

"I just feel it's time I spoke out about my experiences," he said.

A self-proclaimed "Jewish boy from the Bronx," Bregman was drafted in 1943 and sent to anti-aircraft training but ended up in the infantry as the need for foot soldiers grew.

Along with thousands of others, Bregman landed in Normandy shortly after the D-Day invasion. He spent time in France and the Netherlands before being sent with the 7th Armored Division to Belgium, in December 1944, to take part in the Battle of the Bulge, the bloodiest battle of World War II, in which 19,000 American soldiers lost their lives. The battle also resulted in the largest mass U.S. surrender of the war (although the U.S. ultimately won the battle).

Bregman was among those captured, and he remembers being marched to a nearby train station — with Allied planes dropping bombs all around — where he and other prisoners were packed into cattle cars.

"We were on the train for five days with no food or water," he said. "We couldn't even lie down because there were so many guys packed into the car."

After a short stop at a large prison camp, Bregman was shipped to a rock quarry, where he spent six months breaking rocks from early morning until dark. Though he had warm

Army veteran Gerald Bregman of Highland Beach with his service medals. Bregman (shown below in 1943), landed at Normandy with the 7th Armored Division and moved east to block the Nazi surge known as the Battle of the Bulge. The Nazis captured him in Belgium, and he went home after the Allied victory. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star clothes, Bregman suffered frostbite on his toes and lost close to 80 pounds. Fed only bread and water, he managed to barter for potatoes stolen from the Germans, only to have others in the barracks steal them from him.

Shortly before the war came to an end, Bregman was taken to a rest camp close to a German airfield. He remembers almost being killed twice by friendly fire as British planes bombed the airfield and strafed the surrounding area.

With German soldiers fleeing, the prisoners were free, and Bregman and others were able to walk back to American lines. He was flown back to France and then put on a crowded troop ship and returned to the United States.

After recovering and taking on several jobs, Bregman settled down. He raised his family in suburban New York, where he owned a vending-machine business and later a hardware store.

Today, Bregman, who came to Florida permanently after his wife of more than 50 years died, is enjoying retirement, playing poker and bingo.

He talks easily about everything, from his trips to New England to his trips to the VA clinic not far down the road. Now, he'll even share stories about his trip to Europe in the 1940s, courtesy of the U.S. Army, tales he kept to himself for decades.

— Rich Pollack

Q. Where did you grow up?

A. I grew up in the Bronx and went to local schools, including Stuyvesant High School. I also went to City College.

Q. What are some highlights of your life?

A. Getting married and having two sons and five grandchildren. I had 56 wonderful years with my wife, Marilyn.

Q. How did you choose to make your home in Highland Beach?

A. I came down to stay with my son, who lives in Highland Beach.

Q. What is your favorite part about living in Highland Beach?

A. I enjoy the activities in my condo and living on the beach.

Q. Why didn't you talk about your WWII experiences for such a long time?

A. I didn't think people would be interested. I just didn't feel like talking about it.

It wasn't a pleasant time of my life. I don't think many veterans found it pleasant to talk about.

Q. What kept you going during those days as a POW?

A. One of the things that kept me going was that I was able to trade cigarettes for potatoes.

Q. What is the biggest lesson you learned from your wartime experience?

A. I learned that I can survive in tough situations.

Q. If someone made a movie of your life, who would you like to play you and why?

A. Don Rickles would be good. He has no hair, like me, and he's funny.

Q. What music do you listen to when you need inspiration? When you want to relax?

A. Light classical music.

Q. Who/what makes you laugh?

A. Comedians and funny movies. I also enjoy my own comedy moments.

Business Spotlight

New 'Wave' hits Atlantic Avenue

By Ron Hayes

Old Vines has a new name. On June 5, the venerable wine shop at 900 Atlantic Ave. in Delray Beach became The Wine Wave.

"We wanted something that sounded young and beachy and more Delray," says Lindsey Gasparini, 27, who bought the business with her partner, Jeremiah Flores, 29.

And Dave Spitzer, the owner since 2009, wanted more time with his grandchildren back in Chicago.

"I used to joke that Old Vines referred to my arms and legs," says Spitzer, a tall, enviably slender man who came to the shop after decades in the hotel and restaurant industries.

"When I bought it, my knowledge of wines was about a five on a scale of 1 to 10," estimates Spitzer, who's still at the shop for a few weeks to help the new owners settle in. "I'm leaving at about 8½ or 9. It's been great because now when my wife and I go out to eat, we can pick a wine we know is fun. And we've made great friends. That's the part I'll miss the most."

As Spitzer offered business tips and Flores greeted customers on a recent afternoon, Gasparini took a break to describe how two young professionals came to buy Old Vines.

Both were working for Neogenomics, a national diagnostic testing laboratory. Gasparini was in Boca Raton and Flores — a former Marine who served nine months in Iraq and three in Afghanistan — in Los Angeles. Both dreamed of owning a small business.

"One day, Jeremiah was sitting in a wine bar in Santa Barbara, surfing his iPad for business opportunities, and he found Old Vines," Gasparini said.

In January, they bought both the business and its real estate in the Waterway Building. And they've just bought a townhouse only blocks from the shop.

"Jeremiah used to sit in L.A. traffic for three hours," Gasparini laughs. "Now he walks three blocks to work."

A grand opening is scheduled for 6 p.m. Aug. 1. In the meantime, they'll stay open seven days a week, while a new hardwood floor, granite tasting tables and rustic racks and cabinets are installed in the off hours.

Once the new website is up and running, Gasparini and Flores will tout themselves as purveyors of "Champagne, craft beers and premium liquors," she said. But wine will always be their first wave.

New group lobbies for Palm Beach County beaches

By Cheryl Blackerby

More than 100 people looking for long-term solutions for Palm Beach County's storm-battered beaches crowded into the Boca Raton Resort and Club's Valencia ballroom June 15 for the second meeting of Protect Our Beaches.

Established in August last year, the group says it has 20,000 members already, both individuals and condo associations, from Jupiter to Boca Raton, who live on or near 45 miles of beaches.

Singer Island residents Sonny Nardulli and Bob Gonstead, who grew frustrated trying to get help to fix their island's eroding and surge-damaged beaches, founded the group.

"From 2008 to 2012, we waged a fight to come up with a permanent solution to save our beaches," Gonstead told the group, adding that their members wanted "to get our elected officials on the state and federal level to help us with our problems."

Other objectives of the group, Gonstead said, were "to get permits done in an expedited way; and to protect our homes, protect our ecosystems and protect tourism."

After the meeting, he spoke of his frustration dealing with myriad federal, state and local agencies, including the Department of Environmental Protection, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Palm Beach County Commission. Plans for breakwaters and groins broke down time and again from 2005 to 2012, he said.

"There was disagreement between the DEP and the Corps of Engineers, and we went back to renourishment of the beaches. It's better than nothing, but it's the same old thing. We spend $2 million a year and then watch it wash away," Gonstead said.

He and Nardulli decided they needed a bigger, regional voice to get anything done. "It was too easy for the county to marginalize a small part of the beach," said Gonstead. "We knew we had to get professional help and hired a lobbyist and a public relations firm."

They raised money by calling condo associations and asking for membership fees ($80 for individuals). "They have helped us create this one large voice to help create solutions to our problems," Gonstead said.

The advisory board includes Highland Beach Mayor Bernard Featherman, Boca Raton Councilman Anthony Majhess; Republican state Sen. Joe Negron; Ocean Ridge Mayor Geoffrey Pugh; Highland Beach Commissioner Louis Stern and other community officials in Palm Beach County.

The meeting, hosted by Boca Raton Resort and Club and the Beach Condominium Association, featured speakers Mike Mullins, who has worked for solutions for storm-damaged beaches in Captiva, and John Englander, Boca Raton marine scientist and Bride: Linda Gunn, 45, grew up in Ann Arbor, Mich. She is a graduate of Michigan State University and migrated to Florida in 1990. She is the district sales manager in South Florida for Luxottica, the largest eyewear-frame manufacturer and distributor in the world. When she isn't working, she spends her time volunteering. Linda currently works with the National Society of Arts and Letters, the Spirit of Giving Network and the Delray Beach Public Library, and is co-chairing the 26th annual Woman Volunteer of the Year Luncheon for the Junior League of Boca Raton. She also is a past president of the Junior League.

Groom: Doug Paton, 54, was born in Canada. He moved to South Florida in 1996 after selling his business. Utilizing his management consulting skills, Doug worked with a local private school before accepting the position of CEO at Florence Fuller Child Development Center. Doug currently is a partner and COO of Flagship Solutions Group in Boca Raton. With Linda, he dedicates a lot of his free time to community causes and serves as the president of the Spirit of Giving Network.

How they met: When Linda was the president of Junior League, she invited Doug to come speak at a meeting on behalf of Florence Fuller. They continued to see each other as they both sat on the board of directors for the Spirit of Giving Network. They started dating three years later.

The proposal: In April of last year, Doug and Linda traveled to Paris for a trip to celebrate her best friend's birthday. On a very cold, wet and windy afternoon, they climbed, shivering, the 284 steps of the Arc de Triomphe. At the top, Doug reached into his pocket and took out a special penny he had owned for 45 years. The penny was from the 1967 celebration of Canada's 100th birthday. Doug gave Linda the penny and asked her to spend the rest of her life with him. She agreed. The couple will reside in Delray Beach.

The wedding: June 22, at the Delray Beach Club. It was a perfect evening with a 'supermoon' and 122 guests in attendance.

Sure, it's sweltering outside. But good news can be found in local restaurants where easy-on-the-wallet summer specials abound. Here are some examples:

Boca Raton/Deerfield Beach

Jazziz (201 Plaza Real, Boca Raton, 300-0730) offers live music, prime steaks and seafood with a summer prix fixe menu for $27.

A three-course prix fixe summer menu for $36 (dinner) or $23 (lunch) is available at Kathy's Gazebo Café (4199 N. Federal Highway, Boca Raton, 395-6033) through July 20.

Stephane's Steak & Seafood (2006 N.W. Executive Center Circle, Boca Raton, 893-8838) has a three-course summer menu for just $49.95 per person. It includes entrée-size portions, and is available through the end of September, seven days a week from 4 p.m. to closing.

Celebrating its 10th anniversary, Oceans 234 (234 N. Oceans Blvd., Deerfield Beach, 954-428-2539) rolled out several new menu items and some are being offered as summer specials. Lobster, shrimp and crab omelets with goat cheese and spinach are $18.99; Oreo cheesecake is $8.99; spinach artichoke dip with crostini, $12.99; baby spinach salad, $12.99; Cobb salad, $14.99; Shrimp Fra Diavolo (clams, mussels and marinara over linguini, $31.99; and Grilled Bronzini (roasted potatoes, spinach, lemon) is $28.99.

Boynton Beach

At Cafe Frankie (640 E. Ocean Ave., Boynton Beach, 732-3834), diners can save 50 percent on appetizers between 4:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. and half off on any bottle of wine between 8 and 10 p.m. Other summer savings include $8.99-$9.99 dine-in pizza special from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, or takeout pizza for the same prices Monday through Wednesday. There also are $5.99 lunch specials every day.

Delray Beach

75 Main (actually at 270 E. Atlantic Ave., 243-7975 or 266-3687) is offering a three-course prix fixe dinner for $37.99, Monday through Thursday, through September. The dinner includes a choice of any two items on the dinner menu plus dessert.

If you select from the seasonally inspired prix fixe menu for a three-course dinner for two (Sunday through Thursday) at the Atlantic Grille at the Seagate Hotel (1000 E. Atlantic Ave., Delray Beach, 665-4800) for $33 per person, you also get a bottle of wine. The promotion runs through September. Also new this summer is Blues Night, featuring Orson Whitfield, Andrew Brennan and Joey Gilmore, every Thursday from 8 to 11 p.m.

All-day happy hour (11 a.m.-7 p.m.) is back at Deck 84 (840 E. Atlantic Ave., Delray Beach, 665-8484). The waterside restaurant also features a "five for $10" lunch menu, which includes your choice of one of five lunch entrees and a drink for only $10. New this summer is the launch of a company-wide loyalty program which will earn diners a $30 gift card when they spend $300 at any of restaurant group's locations: Henry's, Deck 84, E&J's Sandwich Shop, Bogart's Bar & Grille and Burt & Max's.

A chef's tasting menu — three courses for $35 — is available at 50 Ocean (50 S. Ocean Ave., Delray Beach, 278-3364) from 5 to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

In Pineapple Grove at Max's Harvest (169 N.E. Second Ave., Delray Beach, 381-9970) you can bring your receipt back within 30 days to receive 10 percent off your next meal. Like wine? Go there Monday nights and get 50 percent off. The restaurant has been offering brown bag lunches

Yoga plus strength training make for a SloBody

When you're dedicated to helping people stay fit and your last name is Slobody, it can be problematic. The name, which is Russian and pronounced "sla-BOH-dee," looks a whole lot like "slow body."

But former NCAA Division I athletes Kirk Slobody and Janine Tiede have changed the way people look at that name, turning it into a clever trademark for their fitness business.

They teach SloBody, a type of hybrid yoga in which the S-L-O stands for strengthening, lengthening and opening. And the body, obviously, is where it all happens.

After growing their business in Seattle for 13 years, the couple decided it was time to live in the sunshine (he had spent part of his childhood in Boca Raton). So they moved to Highland Beach earlier this year and opened a SloBody studio last month in Delray Beach.

"We are striving to create a welcoming space that is fun but also educational," says Tiede, 42. "We want to educate people so they can continue to do what they love to do, and have a better sense of their body and how to work with it."

SloBody classes combine the postures and deep breathing of yoga with other strength-building maneuvers. Each student uses a yoga mat, but instead of East Indian music or chanting in the background, you hear a steady stream of instruction from Slobody and Tiede. They move around the room, helping people in and out of postures, interspersing their narrative with humor, analogy and helpful examples.

"A lot of people want to practice the physical postures offered in yoga, but they don't want all the other stuff that's wrapped up with it," says Slobody, 43.

Slobody and Tiede met while attending George Washington University in Washington, D.C. He was on the swim team. She was a gymnast who later became a professional modern dancer. Both are lifelong body trainers, certified by the National Association of Sports Medicine.

No strangers themselves to athletic injuries, the pair excels at finding safe ways to alter their training to accommodate physical limitations.

"We've worked at health clubs and with corporate fitness programs, and we'd get people who sit eight hours a day," says Tiede. "They're not athletes, they're not dancers — so we learned how to amend the yoga postures for back problems, shoulder problems, joint replacements and overweight individuals."

"And they got so much benefit from it," Slobody adds. "These folks are completely underserved, and often ignored by the yoga community."

Gary Abel, a 63-year-old retired teacher from Boynton Beach who usually works out on a treadmill and stationary bike, was never interested in traditional yoga because "it just didn't seem like exercise." He decided to try SloBody at the suggestion of his daughter.

"You really do get a workout," Abel said the day after class. "I left there sweating. You wouldn't think it would be challenging because it's just poses and things, but my rear end is telling me about it today!"

Abel and fellow SloBody rookie Eddie Vega, also 63, said they were happily surprised to see other men in the class.

"I like some of the traditional yoga with the 'om' and all that," says Vega. "But Kirk and Janine have Americanized it. They cut to the chase, use the techniques, the breathing, and they're funny. I think they found a successful formula."

Marinated seafood at Ceviche in Delray Beach

The Plate: Ceviche de la Casa
The Place: Ceviche, 116 N.E. Sixth Ave., Delray Beach; 894-8599 or ceviche.com
The Price: $10

The Skinny: It's amazing how something so good can be good for you.

We're talking about ceviche, that raw seafood that cooks in citrus juices.

But we also could be talking about Ceviche, the tapas bar and restaurant that has opened an outpost at the former Falcon House just north of downtown Delray Beach.

Inside, the space is charming and cottage-like. After all, it is a former cottage.

But one cannot imagine the original residents dining on this mix of shrimp, sea scallops, squid and market fish marinated in a mix of lime juice and garlic, tomatoes, Spanish onions, peppers, cilantro and jalapeño.

The seafood in this dish was marinated to al

Scott Simmons/The Coastal Star

dente perfection.

The menu focuses on ceviche and Spanish tapas items, but there also are full entrees. Those with heartier appetites may enjoy the Morrillo de Cochinillo ($18.95), a roasted pork shank in Rioja red wine.

Church makes steady journey to new space in Boynton Beach

The arrival of the Journey Church in East Boynton is raising the roof.

The original $2 million project announced last year to accept Grace Community Church's gracious gift of church property at 715 S. Federal Highway has grown into a $3.5 million renovation project.

The 12-foot ceiling in the original sanctuary will double in height to 24 feet so it also can be a large gymnasium when the new Journey Church opens in November.

"The scope of the project got bigger," the Rev. Scott Baugh said. "It has moved from being just a place to worship on Sundays to become a seven-day-a-week community center."

About 1,300 people attend the congregation's Sunday worship services now at Park Vista High School. Many are young families with children.

The elderly members of Grace Community Church were so impressed by the Journey Church's spiritual energy last year that they gave their church to the younger congregation.

Journey Church members have contributed $1.2 million to prepare their new church home since then. Another $400,000 fundraising drive is under way now.

"They're really pumped," Baugh said. "A lot of people have made sacrifices."

This won't be the typical church when it opens.

"When people enter our lobby, they will feel like they are walking into a giant Starbucks," the pastor says.

Journey Night Out on Wednesdays will be open to the community, with food trucks and access for children to the gymnasium and giant indoor play area.

Recovering alcoholics and drug addicts in Celebrate Recovery will have the church for fellowship on Thursday nights. Food will be given to the poor on Mondays.

"We feel there is a huge need in this area," Baugh said. "It is exciting to see all the lives that are going to be touched."

Volunteering to be a sheriff's chaplain has rewards for the chaplain, too.

"It rekindles what originally drove them to give their life to God," said Bill Gralnick, the sheriff's officer who schedules the volunteers.

Chaplains bring spiritual comfort to families after someone has died in a murder, suicide or tragic accidents where the sheriff has been called. They also ride with deputies, who often turn to the chaplains when they need spiritual guidance.

"When you come out of seminary, all of a sudden there is this world of administration — how to pay for the new social hall, the parking lot needs to be paved. Clergymen say this is not what I originally signed up for," Gralnick said.

Journey Church is raising the roof on the former Grace Community Church. Jerry Lower/The Coastal Star

Rabbi Robert Silvers of B'nai Israel in Boca Raton agreed his religious training focused on improving the lives of others.

"I don't think we learned how to run a synagogue," said Silvers, one of the first sheriff chaplains. "We learned how to minister to people."

Gralnick is looking for retired clergy to volunteer for daytime calls. Active clergy, with jobs during the day, cover the night shifts.

An Air Force chaplain from Operation Iraqi Freedom has landed at St. Lucy Catholic Church in Highland Beach.

"My heart has always been in the South County. I'm so happy to be here," the Rev. Daniel Horgan said.

Horgan

Horgan, 41, graduated from Lynn University in Boca Raton and St. Vincent de Paul Seminary in Boynton Beach. He served at St. Vincent Ferrer Church in Delray Beach for five years before joining the Air Force. He will assist longtime St. Lucy senior pastor Rev. Gerald Grace. "I'm excited about learning from a true Irishman," the Irish-born Horgan said.

First United Methodist Church of Boca Raton is preparing for what it says will be "the largest food collection drive ever in South Palm Beach County," in September.

The congregation's annual Weekend of Service began two years ago with 450 volunteers in a variety of charitable projects.

Last September, more than 600 volunteers packaged 40,000 meals of soy, rice, vitamins and protein for delivery to children in Third World countries. Another 60,000 meals were packaged by the First Methodist congregation after Easter this year.

Church leaders were hard-pressed to top that when they gathered to discuss a food drive for this year's Weekend of Service.

"Out of my mouth came the words that this will be the largest food drive ever," said the Rev. Tom Tift, who admits to being a bit amazed by the magnitude of his proclamation.

To gather a record amount of food, First Methodist is partnering with the Palm Beach County Food Bank, Boca Helping Hands, C.R.O.S. Ministries and the Jacobson Family Food Pantry. The congregation is rallying schools, businesses, other congregations and neighborhoods in both Boca Raton and Delray Beach to participate.

"My dream is for this to become an annual community event where nobody realizes that First Methodist started it," Tift said.

The new associate pastor at First Presbyterian in Delray Beach began her ministry on the early morning shift at Starbucks.

Jessi Higginbotham grew up loving her Jacksonville church. So ministering came naturally as she served coffee to her 5 a.m. regulars.

Higginbotham

After three years at Starbucks, her boss suggested she quit and go into the ministry, which she did.

Higginbotham, 31, becomes the associate for youth and young adults at First Presbyterian. She spent the last four years as youth pastor at a church in Fayetteville, Tenn.

She replaces Rev. Aaron Janklow, who resigned last September to pursue a doctorate degree in Scotland.

Abrupt school closing leaves parishioners sad and confused

By Tim Pallesen

Word that St. Mark Catholic School was closing came one day after the last of Candy Killian's five children completed their primary education there.

"A lot of people tell me I'm lucky because my last child graduated, but I don't feel lucky," Killian told the audience one week later at a Mass for the east Boynton Beach school. "I feel a huge sense of loss, like a family member has passed away."

The 44 percent drop in enrollment that forced the sudden closing left parents, students and teachers confused and upset.

But together they focused on words from the Bible at the May 31 Mass to accept their loss.

"To everything there is a season, a time to be born, a time to die, a time to plant and a time to sow," Ann Marie Chiste read from Ecclesiastes.

Chiste, her brother and a dozen cousins were students in the 1960s through the 1980s. Then, her own three children received their K-8 education at St. Mark in the 1990s.

"I am sad. I am disappointed," Chiste said at the Mass. "Yet negative feelings would serve no useful purpose, and I will try to push them from my heart."

"Instead, I chose to be thankful for having had St. Mark School in my life for over four decades," she said. "We move forward as we must and cherish the memories that were made here."

Killian also encouraged parents to remember the Catholic education that their children received.

"St. Mark School and parish has been our home, an extension of our family," she said.

Ann Marie Chiste gives one of the teachers a goodbye hug. Not only did she attend St. Mark, so did her three children. Jerry Lower/The Coastal Star

"St. Mark has taught, nurtured, loved and raised my children in our holy Catholic faith. They've been given an excellent education, they've been taught to love, to serve and to honor God — not just for one hour a week, but by the lives they lead."

Factors that prompted the school to close weren't discussed at the Mass.

But the Diocese of Palm Beach said the parents of 60 former St. Mark students had enrolled their children at the new Franklin Academy that will open on South Military Trail in Boynton Beach this fall.

Franklin Academy said many families were attracted by single-gender classrooms in which boys and girls are taught separately.

"Girls learn differently from boys," spokesman Scott Szitken said. "We do it for academic reasons, but parents also like it from a social standpoint because it reduces distractions, particularly in middle school."

Franklin Academy expects more than 1,000 students for its first year. Only 126 students enrolled for next year at St. Mark, which had 225 students during the 2012-13 school year.

St. Mark Principal Kelly Ruiz was frustrated, saying the charter school hired away five of her teachers before St. Mark was forced to close.

"Pop-up schools are a novelty," Ruiz said. "We need to get back to the roots of our faith. Any society that removes God as its leader has chaos and no compassion. I will go down fighting for my faith."

Some St. Mark families also were attracted away by the newly rebuilt Galaxy Elementary School. Public and charter schools are tuition-free, compared with the $6,000 a year that St. Mark charged.

Changing demographics also played a role to explain in the departure of students.

"Some families don't live near the school anymore," diocese spokeswoman Dianne Laubert said. "They moved west."

But the reasons that St. Mark School closed weren't the focus of the Mass, where students gave the offertory petitions.

"For all of us, as members of the St. Mark family, may we treasure the past with fondness and good memories, and build a future based on faith, hope and love," third-grader Samantha Shortley prayed.

The diocese is helping the remaining 126 students transfer to other Catholic schools. Eighth-graders will remain together in a classroom at Pope John Paul II High School in Boca Raton.

Sixth-grader Kyle Felter gave the prayer for the departing St. Mark students:

"May we show that we value the academic knowledge we received here at St. Mark and give testament to the education we received by studying hard at our new schools, exhibiting exemplary behavior, and making our parents and teachers proud," he prayed. ★

Garden party marks club's 60th anniversary

By Deborah S. Hartz-Seeley

Marking its 60th anniversary, the Boca Raton Garden Club invited the public to a celebration on June 8. About 100 people attended an open house at the club's newly redecorated Garden Center. They came to tour the club's garden, hear proclamations from Boca Raton Mayor Susan Whelchel and learn about the club's activities.

"It is our chance to welcome the public and educate them about what we contribute to the community," said club president Carol Brown, who likes to show off the clubhouse's recently redone interior. It includes a new drop ceiling and lighting, white ceiling fans, a coat of interior yellow paint and drapes colorful with fruits and vegetables.

"Before we had exposed light bulbs and the ceiling was a mess," said Brown, who credits club members as well as community businesses such as Home Depot and Lowe's for contributing to the redo.

Sipping iced tea and nibbling cookies, visitors enjoyed a display of green, purple and red potted bromeliads that demonstrated the variety of plant life these members propagate.

Wreaths made from shells, lavender sachets and a tabletop Christmas tree decorated with butterflies offered a preview of the crafts to be made for November's Holiday House fundraiser.

Photo displays let attendees see how the club helps children learn to garden. And leafing through a scrapbook of club members working with the elderly, you could see the joy that flowers bring to Alzheimer's patients at the Louis and Anne Green Memory and Wellness Center at FAU.

Members stood out because they wore peach golf shirts embroidered with the club's flower, the yellow piriqueta caroliniana.

"I joined the club and have made a lot of friends," says Lise Baklid, who moved here from Switzerland in 2008. "I have two sons, and I'm always chasing them around to soccer games. Joining this group was just for me. It's a beautiful bunch of women."

A table of scrapbooks filled with photos and newspaper clippings showed a sense of the club's history.

The group was founded by Mrs. Willard (Florence) Machle in 1953. At the first meeting, 34 showed up, and by the end of the year the group included 119 women.

"There wasn't a lot to do in Boca Raton at that time, so I think that helped," said Brown, who says the group now has almost 150 members.

One of the first club projects was beautifying the town. They got $2,000 from the Florida East Coast Railway Station as well as plant parks and approaches to the city on Federal Highway. They planted 30 trees along the street, including palms, ficus exoticas and royal poincianas.

They bought the Garden Center in 1964 for $6,000. It included three city lots and a building that was either a boiler room and coal bin or a mess hall left over from the Army Air Force base built in Boca Raton during World War II.

The building was gutted and sectioned into an office, horticulture room, kitchen and restrooms, all of which exist today. The mortgage was paid off in 1968. And in 1971, they added the auditorium where today's activities are centered.

Brown is proud to display a photo of the current membership taken by photographer Ben Hicks. He posed the women on a lawn similar to how the women were seated in a black-and-white photo that was taken of club members in 1953.

"Without this and other beautification organizations, Boca Raton could not be the landscaped tree city that it is today," said Whelchel. Her remarks were followed by a tour of the garden led by landscape chairwoman Carol Rice, who is in charge of the Dirt Gardeners, about 10 club members who maintain the grounds.

After meeting under a 20-year-old gumbo limbo tree, Rice ushered attendees to the fairy petticoat, a tree donated by Gardino Nursery in Delray Beach to honor the club's anniversary.

This Australian native gets thousands of pink and white flowers on it. Those flowers resemble Hawaiian skirts and smell like honey, explained Sid Gardino.

Guests strolled through the club's butterfly garden, yellow garden, Japanese garden, succulent garden, bromeliad garden and rose garden.

"A garden requires a lot of work, but provides peace, quiet and joy," said Rice. "It gives back so much more than it ever takes." ★

The male great Southern white butterfly is easy to identify because of his aquamarine-blue tipped antennae.
Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

Butterfly bursts onto scene in great numbers

By Cheryl Blackerby

The great Southern white butterfly is having a great year, as thousands flutter along the coast in much larger numbers than usual.

The butterfly population explosion is a result of an uncommonly wet spring with drenching rains before and after Tropical Storm Andrea.

The Southern white is one of South Florida's prettiest: The males are bright white with aquamarine blue-tipped antennae, and the females are generally light to dark gray. They are normally found on coastal dunes and in coastal gardens, but recently they seem to be everywhere.

"After rains, the Southern white butterflies can build up huge numbers very quickly, and become very visible. It really shines in the sunlight," said Dr. Jaret Daniels, associate curator of lepidoptera at the University of Florida's Florida Museum of Natural History in Gainesville.

The butterflies, one of five white butterflies commonly found in Florida, stay near the coast. Found year-round in southern Florida, they don't migrate like other butterflies such as monarchs, but they do travel — generally 20 to 40 miles in two days or less.

"Once those large numbers of butterflies reach a certain point, they move out and will go from island to island following the coast," he said, adding that the butterflies will be active well through the fall until the temperature drops and their numbers dwindle.

"They can disperse hundreds of miles depending on the resources available," he said.

The Southern white, which is in the family of Pieridae/white and sulphurs, has a lifespan of a few weeks. The eggs are pale yellow and are not harmed by saltwater.

The caterpillars are yellow/green with dark gray longitudinal stripes and are covered in small black spots.

Host plants are Virginia pepper grass, saltwort, beach cabbage, limber caper and sea rocket.

Saltwort, lantanas, verbenas, and spanish needles are their favorite nectar plants.

Good luck trying to photograph one of the energetic Southern whites. "They don't sit around very much," said Daniels. ★

A tragic rarity from the Bard plus rarely heard works of chamber music

The Roman soldier Caius Martius, later called Coriolanus, is one of William Shakespeare's least empathetic heroes.

"He's just a machine," said Kevin Crawford, who will portray one of the Bard's most enigmatic roles in the Palm Beach Shakespeare Festival's production of Coriolanus, which debuts this month at the Seabreeze Amphitheater at Carlin Park in Jupiter. "He can't fathom the thought of being who he is aristocratically, and having to deal with these common people."

Crawford, a professor of English and theater at Reinhardt University, a small Methodist school in Waleska, Ga., north of Atlanta, helped found the festival in 1990 and has played many of the lead roles in its productions. He's also directing the show.

"Coriolanus is often considered one of the finest of the tragedies, even though it's not lumped with Macbeth, Hamlet, Othello and King Lear as one of the Big Four greats," he said. "It made actors' careers in the 19th century and the late 18th century. If you went to London as a young actor, and you were really going to make it big, you had to do the Big Four, and you had to do Coriolanus as well."

Set in the early days of the Roman Republic, roughly 500 years before Julius Caesar, Coriolanus tells the story of a city in turmoil, with famine among the people and threats from a neighboring tribe, the Volscians. Caius Martius defeats the enemy at their city of Corioles, for which he is given the name "Coriolanus" on his return in triumph and asked to run for consul.

But he cannot ally himself to the ruling system, in which the voice of the people is expressed, and he is banished from Rome. He defects to the Volscian side and allies with his old enemy, Tullus Aufidius, and they lay siege to Rome. Coriolanus' powerful mother, Volumnia, brokers a peace treaty between the cities, setting the scene for the final tragic denouement.

Its most recent film adaptation, in 2011, starred the British actor Ralph Fiennes in his directorial debut (also featured were Gerard Butler, Vanessa Redgrave and Jessica Chastain). Fiennes' gritty movie, shot in Belgrade and set in contemporary times, complete with TV reporters spouting verse, brought fresh focus to questions about the organization of civil society.

Crawford, who said the Fiennes film was one inspiration for choosing the play this year, said the Palm Beach Shakespeare version will be among the most stripped-down of all its productions, with a bare stage, monoliths in the middle, and a Road Warrior dress code. In addition to its reflection of Crawford's love of dystopias, the setting in an undefined "world elsewhere" adds timelessness to concerns that interested Shakespeare at the dawn of the 17th century and that likely will interest us for centuries to come.

"The people are fighting for their lives. Their anger is based on the food shortage; they have no grain. Which I think is very timely for what's going on in the world right now, and what's going to be, probably, the major crisis. ... It's food. What are we going to eat?" he said.

Retired drama teacher Karen Chandler saw the festival's 2012 production of Twelfth Night just after moving to Juno Isles, Crawford said, and then came out for auditions this year. As Volumnia, "she is magnificent. It is a major, major older-female role," he said. "She's a beautiful woman, she speaks well ... she's just fantastic."

Crawford is no less enthusiastic about his Aufidius, a Florida International University theater student named Zach Myers who has appeared in the festival's productions of The Tempest and Twelfth Night. Myers' parents read Shakespeare to him when he was a boy, and that has helped him become "the most amazing verse speaker," Crawford said. "He's got this natural rhythm to it ... and most important, he makes sense."

Crawford has cut the play, which is the fourth-longest in the Shakespeare canon, to about 85 minutes, not counting the intermission. His cast of 16 will perform the work eight times, at 8 p.m. Thursdays through Sundays July 11-14 and July 18-21.

Coriolanus is not the most popular of Shakespeare's plays, and its cast of mostly unlikable people makes it hard for audiences to warm up to it. But it draws an urgent political energy from its subject matter, and that makes it almost painfully contemporary.

"It just seems to speak to whatever generation you're talking about, because it's about people wanting to eat, and people killing other people to eat whatever they want to eat," Crawford said. "And you just can't get around that."

Admission to the festival is free; doors open at 6:30 with entertainment from "the court jester." For more information, email pbsf@bellsouth.net.

Music: The 22nd edition of the Palm Beach Chamber Music Festival gets under way July 5-7 with the first series of programs in its four three-concert weekends.

This durable festival, which began in 1992 when flutist Karen Dixon, clarinetist Michael Forte and bassoonist Michael Ellert decided to give an off-season concert at the Duncan Theatre, has spawned six recordings, provided work for area musicians, and kept local classical music culture at a high, serious level, despite the absence of the visiting luminaries who come in thick and fast during the tourist season.

That's no small feat, and this year's selection of unusual but rewarding repertoire continues a hallowed festival tradition. Also this year, the festival will be expanding, with a fall series in September, October and November of six concerts at Lynn University in Boca Raton and St. Andrew's Episcopal Church in Lake Worth.

Ellert said in May that the players are looking to the future with the fall concerts, but they also are responding to audience demand, a point he emphasized in the group's annual funding-appeal letter to its patrons.

"I made a big deal out of it," Ellert said. "I said, 'You asked for these concerts, you want to come — now you have to support us.'"

While ticket prices and venues for the summer season are staying the same as last year, there is one big change this time around: The Friday night concerts, which will take place at Palm Beach Atlantic University's Persson Hall in West Palm Beach, will now start at 7 p.m. instead of 8 p.m.

The July 5 concert, which will be repeated at 8 p.m. July 6 at the Eissey Campus Theatre in Palm Beach Gardens and at 2 p.m. July 7 at the Delray Beach Center for the Arts' Crest Theatre, features as its major work the Serenade No. 1 (in D, Op. 11) of Johannes Brahms, in an arrangement for nine players by Alan Boustead. The concert opens with the Fantaisie for violin and harp (Op. 124) of Camille Saint-Saëns, followed by the Trumpet Sonata of the contemporary American composer Eric Ewazen.

The second series, set for July 12-14 at the same three locales, offers the Piano Quintet (in F-sharp minor, Op. 67) of the early 20th-century American composer Amy Beach, a beautiful and important work by this pioneering woman composer. Another female composer, France's Claude Arrieu, is represented by her Dixtour (Dectet) for 10 winds, written in 1967; opening the concert is the Serenade in D (Op. 25) for flute, violin and viola, an early work by Beethoven.

Dvorak's great second String Quintet (in G, Op. 77) is the big work on the third series, planned for July 19-21. Rounding out the program is a Scherzo for wind quintet by France's Eugene Bozza, an arrangement of Rosina's cavatina (Una voce poco fa) from Rossini's opera The Barber of Seville for trumpet and wind quintet, Clifford Shipp's Six Variations on a 13th-Century Minnelied, for the same sextet, and the Clarinet Trio of the Russo-Armenian composer Aram Khatchaturian.

Closing out the festival July 26-28 will be Ernst von Dohnanyi's big, powerful Piano Quintet No. 1 (in C minor, Op. 1). The concert will open with the Duo No. 1 (K. 423, in G) for violin and viola of Mozart, and includes the Quintet in the Form of a Chôros for wind quintet (English horn substituting for French horn), by the prolific Brazilian composer Heitor Villa-Lobos, and Pastorale, composed for a similarly unusual ensemble (violin instead of the flute) by Igor Stravinsky.

Tickets for each concert are $25; a four-concert subscription is available for $85. Call 800-330-6874 for more information, or visit www.pbcmf.org.

Film series debuts: Also premiering this month at the Crest is a new eight-episode film series, set for consecutive Wednesdays starting July 10 and running through Aug. 28.

Art Cinema at the Crest will screen each film twice, at 6 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. The second screenings will be introduced by local radio personality Caroline Breder-Watts, now the midday host on Miami's WRLN-91.3 FM, and the pilot of her own show, Cinematically Speaking, on Arts Radio Network.

Six of the films are of very recent vintage, including the Dustin Hoffman-directed Quartet (Aug. 14), Price Check (July 31), starring the always engaging Parker Posey and the Keira Knightley-Jude Law remake of Anna Karenina (July 24).

But the series opens with two classics, the Coen Brothers' 1998 film The Big Lebowski (July 17), and on July 10, the most beloved melodrama in the canon, Casablanca (1942), with Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman, plus a host of European refugee actors whose careers and lives had been upended by the Nazis.

Tickets for each film are $8, and a cash bar and concessions are available. For more information, call 243-7922, ext. 321.

Outsider art: A traveling exhibition featuring work by artists with developmental disabilities arrives July 27 at the Boca Museum of Art and lasts through Sept. 22.

Create, organized by the University of California-Berkeley Art Museum and Pacific Film Archive along with New York's Independent Curators International, presents more than 100 pieces by 20 artists who have worked at three nonprofits for disabled artists.

The exhibition is being presented in tandem with a summer art class for teens with mild to moderate autism. The weekly classes, organized with help from Florida Atlantic University's Center for Autism, began July 2 at the museum's art school on Palmetto Park Road and continues through July 26. (For more information, call 392-2503.)

The museum is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, and noon to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Standard admission is $8. Call 392-2500 or visit www.bocamuseum.org.

Tri-County rescues animals from Oklahoma shelters

Boca Raton is about 1,400 miles away from Moore, Okla. It takes about 23 hours to drive this distance.

Neither the miles nor the hours deterred Suzi Goldsmith and her staff at Tri-County Humane Society.

Within minutes of seeing televised accounts of the EF5 tornado that struck Moore on May 20, Suzi Goldsmith, founder and director of this no-kill shelter based in Boca Raton, was in action mode.

And, within 24 hours, she had dispatched two Tri-County Humane Society vans with five staffers and stocked with food/medical supplies to help the displaced pets and overflowing animal shelters in the path of this tornado that reached winds in excess of 200 miles per hour.

“Although our service area is Palm, Broward, Miami-Dade and Martin counties, when a disaster strikes, we don’t have boundaries,” says Goldsmith. “We immediately contacted the shelters in Oklahoma and told them we wanted to help. It’s what we do.”

The team of Matthew Gaquer, Anthony Jackovich,

Gretchen came from a shelter in Oklahoma. ‘We just fell in love,’ Carol Stuck said. RIGHT: Duke, a Great Dane, was adopted the day this photo was taken. Photos by Libby Vigoles/The Coastal Star

About Tri-County Humane Society

The Tri-County Humane Society is a no-kill non-profit group that serves Palm Beach, Broward, Miami-Dade and Martin counties. To view some photos and videos taken of their rescue trek to Moore, Okla., visit: www.tricountyhumane.org/oklahoma-rescue/. And, to learn how you can be a volunteer, donate needed items or adopt a pet, visit www.tricountyhumane.org.

Kim Spencer, Paul Motz and Vladimir Delva stopped only to eat and re-fill their gas tanks.

Their mission: to bring back dogs and cats housed in four Oklahoma shelters to make room for pets displaced and injured by the tornados in hopes they could be reunited with their worried owners.

“This was a life changer for me,” says Delva, a veterinarian technician of 15 years from Fort Lauderdale. “Seeing what I saw there really helps put life in perspective. I walked by cars flipped upside down.

I saw people walking in the middle of fields with trash bags, trying to gather some of their belongings like car keys and family photos. There were distraught and lost looks on the faces of so many people we met there.”

At each shelter they visited the Tri-County team in their yellow logo-shirts worked with shelter staff to assess the medical conditions and temperaments of the cats and dogs they were planning to transport back to South Florida.

By the time the team was ready to leave, their vans contained a priceless cargo of 80 cats and dogs, ranging in size from 8-day-old puppies to the aptly named Mr. Big, a harlequin Great Dane. Oh yeah, and unwanted passengers — far too many ticks.

“I’ve never seen ticks this big — except in photos in my veterinary books,” says Delva. “We bombed the vans and sprayed before and after, but it was rough. When we stopped midway home at a pet-friendly hotel, we had to give medicated baths to all the puppies and some of the other adult pets. Thank goodness for the understanding hotel staff. They gave us a hose to clean and donated about 500 towels and blankets to care for all the pets we were bringing back.”

The vans reached Boca Raton at 10:30 p.m. on May 29 in the middle of a downpour — naturally. Goldsmith and her staff that stayed were waiting, and after exchanging hugs, began unloading the rescued pets. The first one to depart from a van was Mr. Big.

“We were thrilled — there were tears coming from our eyes because we realized we just saved 80 animals from death,” declares Goldsmith. “We assisted during Hurricane Katrina and other natural disasters, but this was our biggest rescue ever — 80 animals at one time.”

Now, Goldsmith and her team are busy finding homes for these pets who survived one of the nation’s nastiest tornados.

“This trip definitely brought us together,” says Delva. “It’s always been like a family environment for us at Tri-County, but after working 24 hours together day after day in Oklahoma, it definitely has made us even closer. We did quick assessments on all the pets we brought back, then gave them food and water and showed them that they were coming to a place of love.”

Love — now that’s something Goldsmith and her Tri-County team never have in short supply when it comes to reaching out to animals in need.

House of the Month

Each month, The Coastal Star features a house for sale in our community. The House of the Month is presented as a service to our advertisers and provides readers with a peek inside one of our very special houses.

Designed as a personal retreat, the master suite offers a large bedroom, marble bath, walk-in closets and direct Intracoastal views.

Sit back, relax and watch the world go by along the Intracoastal Waterway behind this beautifully renovated home at Pelican Harbor in Delray Beach.

Waterfront views at Pelican Harbor beauty

Expansive Intracoastal Waterway vistas enhance this beautifully remodeled residence that is within the walled and 24-hour-guard gated boating enclave of Pelican Harbor.

Classic Venetian-inspired architectural details and interior motifs enhance the tropical setting. The open floor plan of this 3,200-square-foot home accommodates entertaining on a casual or more elaborate scale, with living areas that open to the outdoors.

Meticulously updated, the residence features impact glass windows and doors.

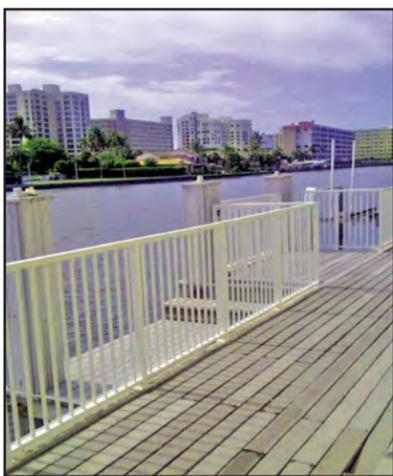

The main living areas feature magnificent stone floors, imported granite countertops and warm wood cabinetry. It boasts a wonderful eat-in kitchen.

The master suite is expansive with a zen-inspired atmosphere for ultimate relaxation. Each of the three family/guest bedrooms boasts an ensuite private bathroom and generous closet space.

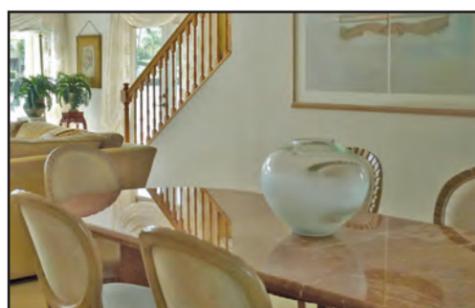

With its prime location and abundant recreational opportunities, Pelican Harbor in Delray Beach is one of South Palm Beach County's most sought-after boating enclaves. Full club amenities include lighted tennis courts, two swimming pools, a well-equipped fitness center, club room and yacht club with an outdoor entertainment patio and grills. Private dockage is also available for sizable yachts, an appealing feature for Pelican Harbor residents who, as boaters, appreciate the protected boat basin and the absence of fixed bridges.

Offered at $1.2 million. Call John List, Realtor, Worth Avenue Realty, (561) 212-2112; john@johnlist.com; www.WorthAvenueRealty.com

This four-bedroom, four-bath condo has deep-water dockage and offers 60 front feet of Intracoastal frontage.

ABOVE: The home offers Intracoastal Waterway views. LEFT: The home offers plenty of space for entertaining indoors and out, with a formal dining space next to the living room.
