Is Hillstone's ending of Wildflower negotiations a strategy?

If not, what next?

By Steve Plunkett

City leaders are waiting to see whether Hillstone Restaurant Group will reopen negotiations on putting a restaurant on the Wildflower site or be replaced by a more eager rival.

Hillstone, which already operates the Houston's Restaurant west of Interstate 95 in the city, withdrew its proposal to develop a second one at the city-owned parcel on the Intracoastal on Oct. 22, citing a demand from Boca Raton for what it said amounted to "several millions more" in rent.

"I've been in business," Councilman Scott Singer said at a workshop the following Monday. "Sometimes when you get a letter saying we're no longer negotiating, the next thing that happens is negotiations continue."

Councilman Michael Mullaugh agreed.

"If there is no response (from us) and that was just a negotiating ploy, we'll hear from them. If they're serious, (then it's) goodbye," Mullaugh said. "If there is some other restaurateur around Boca who is interested, they can't possibly not know how to get to City Hall. They can find us, they can See WILDFLOWER on page 13

CHANGING TIDES

Authorities grapple with seasonal flooding

By Willie Howard

Late October's extreme tides flooded parking lots and neighborhood roads from Boca Raton to Lantana, reinforcing the need for higher sea walls and other improvements that could hold back rising water in the future.

Pushed higher by an Oct. 27 full moon that was close to the Earth in its orbit, tidewater covered roads around marinas in Delray Beach and Boynton Beach, flooded a Boca Raton neighborhood, inundated the parking lot at Lantana's Sportsman's Park and came bubbling up through storm drains along Ocean Avenue in Ocean Ridge.

"It's not something we can deny any longer," Delray Beach Vice Mayor Shelly Petrolia said. "In

At 3:45 a.m. on Saturday, Oct. 17, two SUVs pulled out of Briny Breezes onto a dark and deserted North Ocean Avenue, bound for Fort Lauderdale International Airport.

The Hyundai was driven by Marla Guzzardo, a former flight attendant who retired after 38 years with American Airlines.

Old Ocean a holdout among vanishing ocean views

here are few places left in southern Palm Beach County where you can see the Atlantic Ocean. Private homes and condos block most of the views. Only along the public beach in Delray Beach, in spots where sea grapes have been trimmed along Boca Raton's public beach and at the inlet bridges are glimpses of the ocean still visible.

Manalapan provides some stunning views along A1A, but the increasing number and size of scattered beach cabanas may soon leave that stretch with views of the ocean limited to all but the property owners.

There is one stretch of road, though, where for generations those "in the know" could drive to check on the beach conditions or simply cruise by to catch a glimpse of moonlight on the ocean. It's named Old Ocean Boulevard and is what remains of the old coastal route through Ocean Ridge and Briny Breezes.

Before the hurricane of 1947, this was the road many from Palm Beach took — traveling the dune-top road down to a gas station and shell shop in Briny Breezes and then a bit farther to the polo fields in Gulf Stream and beyond to Delray Beach and Boca Raton.

Briny pioneers tell tales of Harold Stirling Vanderbilt and his wife stopping off in Briny to buy gas and chat with the station owners on their way to and from Eastover, their home in Manalapan.

A1A runs to the west

now, the gas station and shell shop are gone and the polo fields are mostly golf course, but historic Eastover and Gulf Stream Golf Club remain — as does Old Ocean Boulevard.

I've traveled this bit of road in both directions for more than 30 years — sometimes taking my elderly mother or aunt for a ride to feel the sun on her face and see the rolling blue expanse of the ocean, and sometimes just to check for myself to see if the surf's up or if the sand is inviting me down for a walk along the shore.

At night I often drive home along this road from dinner with friends in Briny Breezes or the county pocket, listening to jazz on the car radio and stopping to catch a glimpse of moonlight on the water.

Could I (and others) still do these things if Ocean Ridge's proposal to turn this stretch of road into a oneway "promenade" happens? Maybe. But what if Briny Breezes chooses the unneighborly option of turning "their part" of the road private?

If these changes are implemented, we all stand to lose an important connection to local history. And for those of us not lucky enough to live on the water, there will be one less place to catch a glimpse of the ocean.

Hotel magnate helps wounded troops get treatment and support

By Rich Pollack

Lance Shaner was in Buffalo several months ago for what he thought was simply the opening of the new Buffalo Marriott HarborCenter hotel that his company — the Shaner Hotel Group — had been contracted to operate and manage.

While there, however, Shaner learned the owner of the hotel, his longtime friend and owner of the Buffalo Sabres hockey team Terry Pegula, had arranged for the founder of a project called Operation Backbone to give a presentation on the program.

That was when Shaner learned that the nonprofit organization was helping veterans with debilitating spinal and brain injuries receive specialized treatment at centers around the country.

"I didn't know there were thousands of American soldiers with spinal and brain injuries that the Veterans Administration hospitals aren't equipped to treat," says Shaner, 61, a part-time resident of Royal Palm Yacht & Country Club in Boca Raton. "These people aren't getting the care and support they deserve."

Shaner has partnered with the Sabres and Pegula, along with a few others, to help make it possible for Operation Backbone to provide surgical treatments to dozens of the most severely wounded veterans, many in intense pain and on the verge of giving up.

In addition to financial support, Shaner has offered his corporate jet to transport ailing veterans whose injuries make it impossible for them to fly commercially.

"I told them whenever you need my plane you can have it," Shaner said.

Operation Backbone, which receives many patient referrals from the military, works with treatment centers in cities such as Tampa, Buffalo, Houston, San Diego and also at Johns Hopkins Medical Center in Maryland. It also works with a neurosurgery center in Boston, where it partners with the Boston Bruins hockey team and CEO Charlie Jacobs.

Shaner also agreed to let Operation Backbone veterans traveling for treatment stay in any of more than 48 hotels his company has ownership in or manages — including the new Fairfield Inn & Suites in Delray Beach and several others throughout Florida — at no cost.

He also used his connections to help veterans get rooms in Marriott hotels — not owned by his group — near treatment facilities.

Shaner tells the story of a veteran identified only as "the colonel" who was flown to treatment on the corporate jet and whose treatment was successful.

"When you can experience a veteran in intense pain and you fly the man to treatment and then a month later see that same soldier saying he's pain-free and 'you saved my life' — it doesn't get any better than that," Shaner said.

Shaner, who also operates Shaner Capital, an investment business that helps small businesses grow, is not new to philanthropy. He's funded a cancer treatment center and also an Easter Seals child development center, both in State College, Pa., where he spends summers.

"I've been fortunate in business where I can make a difference," he said. "With Operation Backbone, you can see it so clearly."

Mike Sformo, Operation Backbone's founder, says that in addition to financial support, Shaner and Pegula help raise awareness so veterans and their families know there is help available to those suffering with severe brain and spinal injuries.

Shaner said that he and Sformo are studying the feasibility of placing information about the program in all 5,000 rooms in hotels owned or managed by the Shaner Hotel

Sformo says Shaner also helps provide him with business knowledge and guidance that is invaluable.

"The most important thing is to find people who know how to do this better than I do," he said. "It's good to know they have faith and trust in the program."

Commissioners air pros and cons of opening Ocean Strand

By Steve Plunkett

Don't be surprised to get a ticket if you park at Ocean Strand.

The Greater Boca Raton Beach and Park District is asking the city to help it keep people off the almost 15-acre parcel that stretches from the Atlantic to the Intracoastal Waterway.

"We will get with the city to see about access that is being made to the land on the west side of A1A and try to get more control on individuals who go down into the western part of Ocean Strand," said Arthur Koski, the district's executive director.

"It's got to be secured so they cannot get back there with ATVs," Commissioner Robert Rollins said.

Gabriel Banfi, who lives in Boca Towers next to the undeveloped property, told commissioners Oct. 26 that people reach the site in a variety of ways.

"Some of these people are very unruly," Banfi said. "Some people just stop their cars there, they are walking there, some others come in bicycles and others in motorcycles."

Commissioner Earl Starkoff

asked why access to the property, midway between Red Reef and Spanish River parks, is blocked off.

"Here's this wonderful piece of land, and we've got it fenced off from people who could maybe park there," he said.

Koski reminded the board that it decided in 2012 to let "the next generation" decide what to do with the parcel after a consultant said there was no current demand for another beachfront park.

He also said Ocean Strand would need at least a traffic signal on State Road A1A to keep pedestrians crossing the highway safe if the district were to open the property.

The site also has mangroves and sea grapes overrunning its seawall on the Intracoastal, a number of exotic plants and an aging dock that is not suitable for public use, Koski said.

Ocean Strand has sat unused since the district bought it 21 years ago for $11.9 million.

Starkoff said he wants commissioners to consider short-term and long-term uses of the land at a future meeting instead of waiting for the next generation.

City installs first electric car charging station

By Rich Pollack

There's good news for electric car owners who like to zip around downtown Boca Raton in a Toyota Prius, Tesla or Nissan Leaf.

The city installed its first public electric car charging station in late September in an effort to provide convenience to those who already own battery-powered vehicles and to encourage others to be more energy efficient.

"We have to support people who have cars to charge," says Deputy Mayor Robert Weinroth, who is the owner of an all-electric Nissan Leaf. "People are buying electric cars and we need to encourage people who want to go to an alternative-type vehicle and support them."

In placing the charging station, city officials looked for a public site that would be centrally located and convenient. They chose the city's downtown public library at 400 NW Second Ave.

"It's a great location," Weinroth said, adding that visitors to the library can charge their cars while browsing through books, using computers or attending a meeting.

The library is also close to downtown shops and restaurants, so those waiting for their cars to charge can take a short walk or catch a ride in one of the free on-demand electric vehicles operated by the Downtowner.

The EVlink 220-volt station, which can charge two cars at a time, cost the city about $2,800. The city will also pick up the tab for the electricity used, which is expected to be minimal.

Weinroth said the charging station fits in well with the city's plans to encourage residents and visitors get around town in a more environmentally friendly way.

"It's all part of an overall shift away from the passenger vehicle," he said. "You can't just pave your way out of traffic congestion."

Weinroth said the city encourages developers in its planned mobility district to include electric car chargers in their development plans and has received a favorable response.

With the new downtown charging station, the city will be leading the way.

"This is a great first step," Weinroth said. "I'm hoping that with the use of this station, there will be another one right behind it."

When you're counting the best hospitals in Florida, you can count on us.

There are nearly 300 hospitals in Florida. And when U.S. News & World Report issued its latest listing for Best Regional Hospitals, our numbers were quite impressive. In fact, Boca Raton Regional Hospital was ranked 12th in the entire state and 4th in the Miami-Fort Lauderdale metro area, earning us a Best Regional Hospital designation. Only 520 of the nation's 5,000 hospitals received such a prestigious accolade.

It's another in a growing list of national honors for Boca Regional. And another way of knowing that if you're in need of advanced, high-quality healthcare, you can count on us.

Towns rank consultant bids for fire district study

By Dan Moffett

A barrier island fire district is many months and many political battles away from becoming a reality — if it ever happens at all.

But one thing is already clear. At least a feasibility study is feasible.

Representatives from the coalition of coastal municipalities interested in the fire district idea met in Gulf Stream on Oct. 30 to open bids from consultants who are interested in studying it. And all of the four proposals submitted came in well under the $100,000 price limit the six towns were looking for.

Matrix Consulting Group of Keller, Texas, was the low bidder at $39,000, and also ranked highest in the overall rating system the representatives used. Gulf Stream Town Manager William Thrasher said that cost had little to do with the decision, accounting for only 15 percent of the factors the town representatives considered.

"It's ironic, really, because much more than money went into the ratings," Thrasher said. "We looked at many factors."

Ranking second was Fitch and Associates of Platte City, Mo., with a bid of $48,600, followed by Public Safety Solutions Inc. of Chester, Md., with $68,850 and the local entry, Special District Services Inc. of Palm Beach Gardens, with $70,000.

Gulf Stream Town Clerk Rita Taylor said the town representatives "were all pretty much in line with one another" during their deliberations.

The group included:
Thrasher, Highland Beach
Town Manager Beverly Brown,
Briny Breezes Town Council President Sue Thaler and Briny corporate board member Paul Stewart, new Ocean Ridge
Town Manager Jamie Titcomb and South Palm Beach Mayor
Bonnie Fischer. Manalapan Town Manager Linda Stumpf, a member of the group, was absent because she was participating in a police arbitration hearing.

Thrasher said the next step is to get approval from Gulf Stream's legal staff, and then the Town Commission at its Nov. 13 meeting. Once the feasibility study gets the go-ahead from officials, the consultants will have 90 days to study the six towns — Gulf Stream, Highland Beach, Briny Breezes, Ocean Ridge, Manalapan and South Palm Beach — and report back to the coalition.

"I'd like everyone, all the towns, to contribute something," Thrasher said of sharing the study's cost. "But I don't think money is going to be a problem for us with this."

The six municipalities total roughly 100,000 residents and currently pay for their firerescue services from Palm Beach County, Boynton Beach or Delray Beach. But the providers on the mainland have steadily charged more over the last decade, and Boynton Beach and Delray Beach have considered consolidating their departments with the county's — a move that would cause significant problems in Gulf Stream, Briny Breezes and Ocean Ridge.

Thrasher thinks that for the fire district to work, the towns would have to build a fire station in Briny Breezes and overhaul the maintenance building in the lot behind the Ocean Ridge Town Hall. He said Palm Beach architect Mark Marsh believes the most favorable place for the Briny station is in the storage lot on A1A across from the entrance to Tropical Drive.

Gulf Stream Vice Mayor Robert Ganger, a supporter of the fire district study, said Thrasher deserves praise for getting the coalition together and bringing the idea forward.

"It took some courage for Bill to go forward with this and get all these communities onboard," Ganger said. "He put his credibility on the line. But this is something we have got to look at."

City opts to improve fire service rather than contract with county

By Jane Smith

Delray Beach will focus on raising the level of service of its own fire-rescue department instead of consolidating with the county, city commissioners agreed Nov. 3.

Just four residents spoke against the consolidation.

"We are a smallish town," said Susan Ruby, who lives in the Del Ida neighborhood. "Fire-rescue is an essential, vital service. I wouldn't even know who to call in the county."

City Manager Don Cooper explained he had received a memo with only four sentences from the county on Oct. 21, not enough information to present to the commission. He wanted to concentrate on preparing for the city's goal-setting session set for Oct. 29.

He added that the county gave him a December deadline because it needed to know whether to add the county's fire-rescue tax rate to the Delray Beach proposed tax bills

Cooper added that the December deadline didn't give him enough time to receive and review a county contract.

Four commissioners attended the Nov. 3 meeting. Commissioner Jordana Jarjura was absent.

Two, including Mayor Cary Glickstein, thought the city manager had overstepped his bounds when he sent an email ending the discussions with the county.

Commissioner Al Jacquet, the other commissioner who chided the city manager, asked City Attorney Noel Pfeffer what form of government Delray Beach has.

Pfeffer said a strong city manager and weak mayor.

"The burden should have been on our shoulders. It's a tough decision to make, it should have been ours," Jacquet

The city has a commitment to public safety, "yet we allowed this issue to kick the can down the street," Glickstein said.

"We haven't bought firetrucks, some of our fire stations are in abominal shape."

He directed the city manager to determine the level of service the Fire-Rescue Department needs to put it back into the top quartile in the county.

Vice Mayor Shelly Petrolia and Commissioner Mitch Katz supported the city manager's actions.

Emails had zipped around the city the week before, most were against consolidation.

Another round of prerecorded telephone calls went out on the afternoon of Nov. 2 to phones with a Delray Beach exchange.

The robocall message was not as threatening as the one in late September, but it pointed out that Jarjura and Glickstein had received support or campaign money from the county fire-fighters union. It urged recipients to call the commissioners and tell them not to consolidate.

"I have received no phone calls and about 15 emails," the mayor wrote in an email about 6 p.m. Nov. 2. "I received numerous contributions in the last two campaigns and one of the contributors was the fire-rescue union in both campaigns, whose members include the city's fire-rescue department. I'm not sure how that's relevant, particularly when I voted against the consolidation last year when it was initially proposed.

"In the end, I think the calls and emails were insulting to our residents in suggesting the people they elected would make such a decision that impacts 25 percent of the city's budget based on $500 campaign contribution."

Delray Beach's 2015-2016 nearly $105 million budget allocates about $27 million for fire-rescue

Cooper, the city manager, had sent an email to city commissioners the last week in October saying the proposed agreement for consolidation would take further lengthy negotiations. As a result, he "stopped discussion on this issue and will focus our resources on ... addressing the various issues within the fire department."

One day later at the city's goal-setting session, he agreed to present the consolidation issue to the commission at the Nov. 3 meeting.

Unlike the 2014 proposal, which used a full-cost methodology, this time the county wants the city to become part of its municipal service taxing unit where property owners pay a flat rate of $3.46 per $1,000 of taxable value.

The county's fire-rescue chief was preparing the county's proposal, which would cover city fire-rescue employees who will have the option to join the Florida retiree system for their pensions, response times, staffing levels, equipment to buy or lease, actual fire stations and other items.

The deal would last five years and the county would pay Delray Beach for its five fire stations, make needed upgrades, hire the city's firefighters and pay for the equipment over that period.

The city would retain the pension liability for its fire-rescue personnel who are currently working without a contract.

Delray Beach provides firerescue services to the towns of Gulf Stream and Highland Beach.

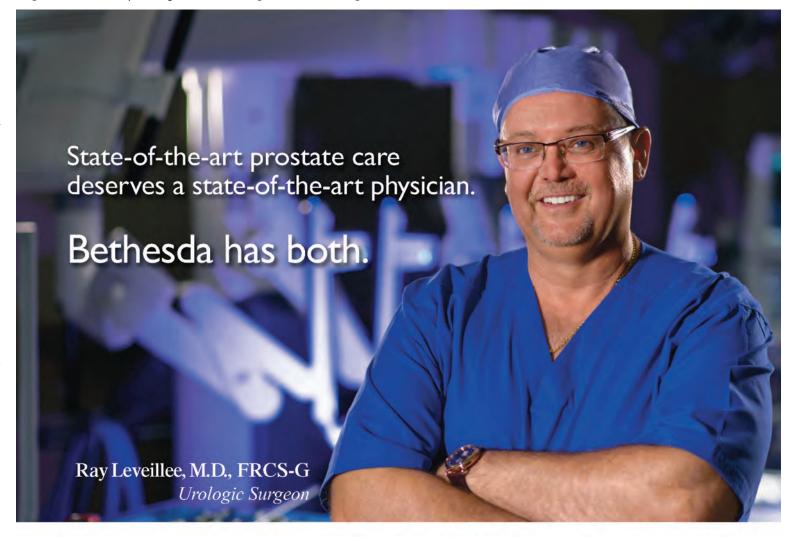

The Highland Beach contract expires next year and Gulf Stream's in 2020. Both towns are exploring a barrier island fire-rescue service.

Boynton Beach also is thinking about consolidating with the county.

City commissioners directed City Manager Lori LaVerriere to survey residents with a questionnaire in the city utility bills.

She will seek further direction on the wording of the question and whether it should be just one vote per account. No date is set for that discussion.

In addition, Boynton Beach provides fire rescue services to the towns of Briny Breezes and Ocean Ridge. Both towns are part of the exploration for a barrier island fire-rescue service.

City inches through parking problems to metered solution

By Jane Smith

Parking meters are coming to downtown Delray Beach, a majority of city commissioners agreed in mid-October. The question remains when.

A majority of commissioners reached that decision in May, too, and were waiting to review proposals for a parking-management plan for the beach area and downtown.

But that May workshop lasted nearly five hours and city staff possibly left confused. The staff put out a request for proposals that asked whether the parking program should be run inhouse or outsourced. Only one company responded.

"We screwed up," said City Manager Don Cooper at the October workshop. He will have staff revise the request for proposals to focus on smart meters that accept different forms of payment for the beach area and then for installation west of the Intracoastal Waterway. The program also would include the two cityowned parking garages, seven city-owned surface lots and possibly a residential parking component.

At the October workshop, Mayor Cary Glickstein expressed his frustration when he said, "Five months later I have an RFP that doesn't address the first component of how to raise revenue."

He estimated that metered parking downtown could provide $3.5 million annually or 5 percent of the general fund.

Commissioner Jordana
Jarjura said she supported paid parking in the downtown. "I also don't think it's fair to the businesses that we are charging to park on the beach side and not in the downtown. A lot of our traffic issues come from people circling, circling, trying to find that prime space."

The other commissioner in support of meters downtown would like to see a phased approach. Commissioner Mitch Katz ticked off his priority list: the beach, Atlantic Avenue west of the Intracoastal, an employee parking program, the garages, the street lots and a residential component.

For logistical reasons, the smart meters likely won't go in the downtown until 2017.

Retailer Bruce Gimmy, who also chairs the city's Parking Management Advisory Board, told commissioners in October, "Parking is not free, we know that... But should taxpayers pay to maintain the garages? I don't think so. A lot of people who pay taxes in Delray Beach never come downtown. It should be a user-fee situation."

Also at the October workshop, Randal Krejcarek, city environmental services director, updated commissioners on what was accomplished since May: better signs for the parking garages and elimination of the on-demand trolley stops in favor of fixed stops.

The Downtown Development Authority's pilot employee parking program was pushed back to mid-December, said Laura Simon, the group's new executive director. The city is working out the details, she said. The program covers retailers and restaurants west of the Intracoastal.

Earlier in October, city commissioners expanded the hours for feeding parking meters east of the Intracoastal Waterway and along the beach.

The new times are 8 a.m. to 11 p.m., seven days a week, effective Oct. 16. The hourly rate remains $1.50.

Glickstein had suggested the expanded hours to mirror activity in the area. "That's when people are on the beach," he said at the Oct. 6 commission meeting. Vice Mayor Shelly Petrolia wanted to make sure the city would have someone to enforce the new hours before agreeing to the change. The city manager assured her the new hours would be enforced.

The meters had to be reprogrammed and stickers applied with the new hours, said Krejcarek, when explaining the 10-day delay.

DDA approves new package for Simon

By Jane Smith

The Downtown Development Authority board will give new Executive Director Laura Simon a salary increase to coincide with her promotion.

Simon

agreed to increase Simon's base salary to $75,000 from $61,800 she made as associate director. She also will receive a $250 monthly car allowance and an $85 monthly cellphone allowance.

Simon was named executive director at the September board meeting of the Delray Beach agency. She took over on Oct. 1.

At a specially called meeting in August, the board voted not to renew the contract of Marjorie Ferrer. Her contract as executive director ended Sept. 30. She had led the DDA since 1993. At the time of her departure, Ferrer's base salary was $94,003 with a $3,600 annual car allowance.

The board felt pressure from Simon, who said she was hired five years ago as Ferrer's replacement and had a job offer. It also was under scrutiny from the City Commission as a tax agency that receives $1 for every $1,000 in taxable property value in its 340 acres. In the summer, Mayor Cary Glickstein pointed out the DDA spent 40 percent of its budget on administrative costs.

Ferrer has since established her own consulting firm, Downtown Management Consulting, where she will help cities manage their downtowns.

Simon's contract will be approved at an upcoming board meeting. It will be retroactive to Oct. 1.

New play equipment approved for Veterans Park

By Jane Smith

Veterans Park will soon have new playground equipment after Delray Beach commissioners agreed to pay slightly more than $92,000 to replace the aging wooden structures.

"We're hoping it can be in the next 12 weeks," said Suzanne Davis, Parks and Recreation director. "I don't want to promise anything. It all depends on the manufacturer and the site plan approval."

Gametime/Dominican Recreation Products, of Longwood in central Florida, submitted the lowest bid for the playground equipment, installation and mulch underneath the 97-by-46-foot area, suitable for ages 2 through 12. The playground equipment also will be compliant with the Americans with Disabilities Act, Davis told commissioners on Oct. 20.

The two wooden playgrounds by Leathers and Associates were constructed through a community build in 1993. City Parks staff repaired problems found through regular inspections, but the age of the structures made replacement parts difficult to find.

"I don't want to have the site without playground equipment for a long time," Davis said after the meeting. "I want to take it apart, haul it away and then level the site and have the new equipment be installed."

Volunteers will be needed to help dismantle the equipment under the guidance of city Parks staff, Davis said. She will get the word out through the city's website and emailing system and traditional media.

For those whose names were on the wooden equipment, they can claim the piece. It also can become part of an artwork that will be created by a local artist near the playground equipment.

Davis also told commissioners on Oct. 20 that the playground equipment could be moved to other areas of the 3.5-acre Veterans Park.

That pleased Vice Mayor Shelly Petrolia, who held the gavel when the mayor left after an hour into the meeting. She long has expressed concern about the condition of the playground equipment.

The nearby Atlantic Crossing project, which plans offices, shops and restaurants, agreed to pay $500,000 to fix up Veterans Park, but the project is in federal litigation with the Commissioners unanimously approved the new playground equipment by a 4-0 vote. *

CRA to negotiate iPic contract requests

By Jane Smith

The owner of the proposed iPic movie theater property in Delray Beach asked to amend for the fourth time the contract to buy the 1.59-acre site.

But the Delray Beach Community Redevelopment Agency, which owns the parcel that sits between Southeast Fourth and Southeast Fifth avenues, took it as an opportunity on Oct. 15 to put some teeth into the contract.

The board agreed 6-0, with Herman Stevens absent, to extend the government approvals date to Dec. 31 and the termination date to Jan. 31, 2016, to allow the CRA attorney to negotiate a better deal. Delray Beach Holdings, which would own the Delray Beach site, had asked for two extensions: April 29, 2016, for the government approvals and Dec. 31, 2016, as the termination date.

If terms can be reached between the CRA and iPic's owner, then the CRA board would review the contract and approve iPic's amended dates.

At the Oct. 15 CRA meeting, board member Daniel Rose had asked for a reverter clause in case iPic does not move its headquarters into Delray Beach or flips the property to a multiplex theater owner.

Doody said the reverter clause had been considered. It sounds good, but it is difficult to enforce, he said.

Rose, who is a lawyer, said he wanted something stronger than the word "covenants," which was in the agreement. He suggested "warranties."

He felt so strongly about the extension that he wrote an email Sept. 30 to the CRA executive director, assistant director and Doody's law firm colleague: "The buyer has the money to close and they are approved to build a movie theater, there is no reason for them to need additional due diligence and they should close without delay. I don't think it is right that we will have to scale back projects such as clean and safe, sidewalk repairs and other valuable projects because the buyer needs more time."

Scott Backman, attorney for Delray Beach Holdings, said, "We are here as iPic, not as a developer. We've been here since Day One."

At the lengthy Aug. 18 City Commission meeting, when iPic received approval on Aug. 19, Mayor Cary Glickstein asked the company to reduce the size. He asked the iPic developer "to let some air out of the tires for us," but he did not give specifics.

A revised site plan was submitted Oct. 12 to the city's Planning and Zoning Department.

The latest plan shows little change in the project, said Tim Stillings, department director, when asked Oct. 29 at the city's goal-setting session. It now has 32 fewer seats among the eight movie auditoriums for a total of 497 seats, and an alley that is four feet wider at 24 feet. The retail square footage was reduced by 500 square feet to 7,000 and the office space grew slightly, Stillings said.

Stillings said he was not going to take the plan to the city's Site Plan Review and Appearance Board and called the developer's attorney to let her know the plan needed more association quilted blankets for every veteran on board the next Honor Flight South Florida trip to Washington, D.C., a daylong visit to the capital's military memorials, a gesture of gratitude to the dwindling World War II generation.

Neither Bonnie Miskel, the developer's land use lawyer, nor her law partner Backman could be reached for comment.

But the Keys association had "already adopted the Wounded Warriors project," she discovered. "I'd put the cart before the horse."

She'd bit off more than she could quilt.

"So I called Marla."
Guzzardo, former flight attendant, is now the vice president of the Briny Breezes Hobby Club.

"How many blankets do you need?" she asked Smilovsky.

"Seventy-six."

"Well, we can't possibly make 76 quilts by Oct. 17," Guzzardo said. "How about fleece?"

And so the call went out. At 9 a.m. on Sunday, Sept. 27, nine women converged on the town's hobby club.

Susan Cooley, another retired flight attendant, came up from Boca Raton and brought her friend Betty Sierra. Linda Guzzardo, Marla's sister, and Linda Allen, a high school friend, drove over from Leisureville, and with hobby club members Sandy Dietzel, Brenda Dooley and Sunshine Miller, the Briny Blanket Brigade set to work.

"Rosie The Riveter had nothing on us," Smilovsky crowed. "We got in there and did an assembly line."

Marla Guzzardo scissored the sheets of blue fleece into blanket-sized squares. Cooley, Dietzel, Smilovsky and Linda Guzzardo cut out military insignia for the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines and pinned them to the fleece. Then Allen, Dooley, Miller and Sierra sewed them onto the blankets.

"We rotated jobs to keep it interesting," Marla Guzzardo recalled, "and by 6 p.m. we'd made 76 blankets in one day."

Vets greeted with gratitude

When the two cars pulled to a stop in front of the baggage claim area at Fort Lauderdale's Terminal 2, those 76 blankets, neatly folded in large plastic bags, filled the back of Smilovsky's car.

A stack of blankets made by the Briny Blanket Brigade to warm World War II veterans on their Honor Flight to Washington, D.C. Photo provided

Inside, Honor Flight volunteers scurried about. Gift bags of sunblock, pads and pens were waiting to be distributed. Homemade posters emblazoned with "Thank You For Our Freedom" and the lyrics from the Marines' Hymn ("From The Halls of Montezuma" and official song of the U.S. Air Force ("The Wild Blue Yonder") waited to greet the vets. A photographer stood before a large banner that promised "One Last Mission," waiting to photograph the vets and their guardians.

Guzzardo and Smilovsky stacked the blankets on a folding table by the check-in desk and waited, too.

At 5 a.m., they began arriving — 30 U.S. Army veterans, 19 Air Force, 12

Navy, nine Marines, four Coast Guard and two from the Merchant Marine. Seventysix old Americans here to be thanked for what they had done as young Americans.

Smilovsky and Guzzardo moved among the wheelchairs, handing a warm blanket adorned with the appropriate insignia to each vet, followed by an even warmer thank-you for their courage all those years ago.

Herbert Chauser, 95, a retired dentist from Boca Raton, received a Navy blanket.

"Thank you, I'll need it! It's going to be cold up there," he said. "This is unbelievable. The amount of work they're doing, and all the smiles and happiness. I appreciate it very, very much." Grace Lesperance, 93, of West Park in Broward County, was 21 when she served as a nurse with the Army Air Corps, prepping hernia patients in Texas.

"We had 26 on the ward, and that's where I met my husband," she said. "I haven't been to Washington in — oh, it must be 50 years ago! I'm just so excited about being here I'll take whatever they give me."

Effort is volunteer-driven

Greeting the vets, George Ferguson knew what they would be given. A retired deputy with the Broward Sheriff's Office, he founded the Honor Flight South Florida chapter in 2012.

"We just tell them we're taking them to D.C.," he said. "They don't know it's a big celebration."

When the vets are wheeled upstairs to the jetway, they'll be met by an honor guard and active members of today's military, and when Honor Flight 1017 rolls onto the runway, fire trucks will spray the passing plane with a "Fireman's Salute."

In Washington, they'll be bused to the World War II Memorial on the Mall, lunch with the Knights of Columbus, attend the changing of the guard at Arlington's Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and pose for photos at the cemetery's Iwo Jima Memorial.

Gratitude is not cheap. Chartering the plane costs about $90,000, Ferguson said, plus an additional $500 for each veteran and accompanying guardian.

"And we try to do that four times a year with no government money involved," he added. "We have about 300 volunteers on flight day, and not one of us gets paid a penny."

Like the Briny Blanket
Brigade, rushing to finish 76 fleece blankets, all those Honor Flight volunteers are also pressed for time. According to the Veterans Administration, about 492 World War II veterans die each day. Of the 16 million Americans who served, only about 850,000 are still with us, and most are in their 90s.

Joseph Mazzucco of west Boca Raton was 19 when he flew with the Air Force on Guam and Saipan in 1943-45. Waiting to fly again this morning, he's 92.

"And I take no medication," he said. "I take two beers every afternoon and some wine at night and I bowl and golf." He held the blue fleece blanket in his lap, grinning with excitement. "I've heard so much about these flights from my neighbors who went on one."

Bernard Gladstein of Boca Raton was 24 when he served in the China-India-Burma theater. He'll be 100 next March.

"It's clean living," he said with a laugh. "I've heard a lot about this, and my son Geoffrey wanted me to go."

Geoffrey Gladstein, who would travel with him, pushed his father's wheelchair over to the "One Last Mission" banner so they could be photographed together.

Guzzardo and Smilovsky stayed until the line of vets waiting for pictures was down to eight or 10.

"We gave away every blanket," Smilovsky said.

Outside, the sky was starting to pale as they found their cars. On I-95, one former flight attendant drove south toward Key Largo, and the other headed north to Briny Breezes.

Before they were home, a chartered Eastern Air Lines 737 was climbing overhead, bound for Washington, D.C., with 76 American heroes and 76 blue fleece blankets on board.

Lois Pope behind film depicting 'human cost of war'

A new documentary film, Debt Of Honor: Disabled Veterans In American History, funded by Manalapan philanthropist Lois Pope and directed by Ric Burns, will premiere nationwide at 9 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 10, as part of PBS' Stories of Service.

Focusing on how disabled veterans are regarded by their government and civilians, the human cost of war, and the sacrifices of military service from the time of the Revolutionary War forward, the film recounts disabled veterans' stories combined with scholarly narrations, still images and archival footage.

Included in the film are interviews with disabled veterans U.S. Rep. Tammy Duckworth (Illinois); former U.S. Sen. and Veterans Affairs Administrator Max Cleland (Georgia); actor, motivational speaker and Iraq War Army veteran J.R. Martinez; and the former garrison commander of Fort Belvoir, Col. Gregory Gadson, who is a double amputee veteran of the war in Iraq.

"The goal of this film is to try to understand the realities and challenges that disabled veterans have faced throughout history and continue to face today," said Burns. "There is a real necessity to bridge the gap between civilians and those who have served in the military."

Pope, founder of the Disabled Veterans Life Memorial Foundation, spearheaded the creation of the American Veterans Disabled for Life Memorial. The reflecting pool and star-shaped fountain with a ceremonial flame is sheltered by impressive stone walls along with bronze and glass panels etched with words and images that illustrate personal journeys of courage and sacrifice.

A 16-year endeavor on Pope's part, the memorial was dedicated by President Barack Obama on Oct. 5, 2014, in Washington, D.C., and is the nation's first permanent public tribute to the 4 million living disabled American veterans and all those who have died before them.

"Not everyone can visit Washington, D.C., and see the memorial dedicated to disabled vets," Pope said. "That's why I created and funded the film Debt of Honor, to teach our children and future generations about the human cost of war.

"It's such a powerful film that the National Endowment for the Humanities has set aside funding (for it) to be shown in cities around the U.S."

Highland Beach

City OK with library changes under interim director

By Rich Pollack

Saying they are pleased with the positive changes they're seeing, Highland Beach commissioners have abandoned efforts to bring in a private firm to manage library operations.

Commissioners in August had agreed to invite representatives of Library
Systems and Services Inc. to town so they could learn more about what the company offers
and whether it would make sense for the town to contract
with the firm.

At the time, commissioners felt the library was still in transition from the sudden May departure of longtime director Mari Suarez and might benefit from management by an experienced outside firm.

Even though interim Library

Director Suzi Hayes has not yet made a decision about accepting the director position on a longterm basis, commissioners say they no longer see a need to meet with LSSI representatives.

"We found a very capable interim librarian and we don't feel it's necessary to meet with the outside firm," said Commissioner Carl Feldman.

Others on the commission agreed.

"We're seeing very positive improvements initiated by our interim director," said Vice Mayor Bill Weitz. "It makes no sense to take any further action."

Town Manager Beverly Brown said two new assistant librarians have been added to the staff. In addition, Brown said, the library has increased its programming to better serve esidents

"The library is putting on a new face and adding new programs to encourage participation," Brown said.

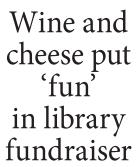

Hayes and the team at the library have already instituted an electronic book cataloging process to increase efficiency and are preparing a survey to determine what additional programs and services residents would like to see at the library.

Already the library has started an adult coloring club and now has bridge lessons available. Plans are also being made to start tai chi classes and the library now has a refreshed website.

In addition, Brown said, the staff has been adjusting programming schedules to help reduce parking issues.

The town manager said she and Town Attorney Glen Torcivia are working with library staff to develop a policy to address outside vendors teaching classes at the library, due to potential liability issues.

One possible solution being explored is to charge vendors a nominal fee to use town facilities for the classes and then allow instructors to charge participants for the programs.

The Friends of the Highland Beach Library will be welcoming back many of the town's returning residents during the third annual Wine and Cheese Fundraiser, set for 5 to 7 p.m. on Dec. 4 at the library.

Last year's fundraiser drew about 150 people and organizers of this year's event are hoping to attract an even larger gathering.

"Our wine and cheese fundraiser is a fun night out," said co-president Dorothy Kellington. "It's close to home and you can meet your friends and neighbors."

The event, which costs $25 per person, will feature a selection of red and white wines as well as a variety of cheeses.

There will also be a Chinese auction with prizes including theater tickets, jewelry, a wine tasting and tea for two.

Money raised will help the library cover the cost of items not included in the town budget, with an emphasis this year on children's programming.

For more information, contact the Highland Beach Library at 278-5455.

make a proposal."

"It sounds like a soft RFP just went out," Councilman Jeremy Rodgers added. "People know where to find us if they want to submit something. I think we're always willing to listen."

In the meantime, the council asked its staff to determine how much it would cost to make the site, on the northwest side of the Palmetto Park Road bridge, more like a park.

"I'm literally looking at minimal — just so it's accessible and not gated off, I would say, the bare minimum to open it up so people can throw down a picnic blanket or sit there while we decide what we're going to use it for long-term," Rodgers said.

City Manager Leif Ahnell suggested pricing the removal of a wall on the north side of the 2.3-acre parcel, which the city bought in 2009 for $7.5 million.

Hillstone's letter ending negotiations on the site stunned city officials.

Deputy Mayor Robert Weinroth said Boca Raton bought the land so everyone could have access to the Intracoastal waterfront.

"I think we were moving in that direction and I'm a little disheartened by what occurred," he said.

In his letter, Glenn Viers, vice president of Hillstone Restaurant Group, explained that the restaurant business "is one of very narrow margins."

The rent the city sought, combined with escalating property taxes, "would stretch Hillstone beyond reasonably

Workshop set to evaluate Palmetto Park, Northeast Fifth intersection

By Steve Plunkett

Boca Raton will have a "public outreach" workshop to evaluate and analyze the intersection of Palmetto Park Road and Northeast Fifth Avenue, long a sore spot in discussions on what to do with the city-owned Wildflower site.

People who attend will have the opportunity to offer input on the needs and wants of adjacent residents and property owners, city consultant Calvin, Giordano & Associates said.

Although it is not a City Council meeting, the consultant anticipates several council members may be present. The meeting will be 5 to 8 p.m. Nov. 16 at the Downtown Library's community room, at 400 NW Second Ave.

"This is a good opportunity for everyone to come in, listen to the facts and weigh in on the intersection and its improvements," Mayor Susan Haynie said. ★ acceptable financial limits," Viers wrote.

His company had proposed building a $10 million Houston's restaurant on the site, once home to the raucous Wildflower bar and restaurant. Neighbors of the site fear a restaurant there will overload Northeast Fifth Avenue with traffic and illegally parked cars.

Ahnell said Hillstone originally proposed paying $500,000 a year in base rent with a 5 percent increase every five years and 5 percent of any profits over $10 million going to offset property taxes. The city countered with a plan under which Hillstone would pay the same base rent but with a 2 percent increase every year, he said.

Hillstone then suggested it pay $600,000 in annual rent but be given a $250,000 offset for property taxes, he said.

They effectively said to us, a reduction in the original proposal to $350,000," Ahnell said. "We said to them, 'Why don't you come in and meet with us face to face and see what we can work out,' and that was met with the letter we received."

Mullaugh said Hillstone's withdrawal was no cause for alarm.

"I don't see that we actually need to do anything," he said. "We just have to keep open to other people who are coming

Weinroth agreed. "The decision by Hillstone should not be setting the decision for us that OK, let's just abandon the idea of this becoming a place where we see something better than either grass and food trucks or a condominium," he said.

The council also asked Ahnell to find a consultant to devise a comprehensive waterfront plan and to work up costs on moving the city's barge from Silver Palm Park to make room for another boat launch.

Members also want to know the price of putting floating docks at the Wildflower site. * yelp :

Briny Breezes

Briny moves to claim ownership of Old Ocean Blvd.

By Dan Moffett

Briny Breezes Town Attorney John Skrandel was researching records for writing a new golf cart ordinance earlier this year when he stumbled onto a historical oversight.

There was nothing in the town's archives to document exactly who owned Old Ocean Boulevard, Briny's oceanfront roadway that residents had just naturally assumed belonged to them.

"Back in the '30s, '40s and '50s, the record-keeping wasn't that good," Skrandel said. "You could say the road was lost—its ownership was lost, just because people didn't follow through with things."

Somewhere around a half-century ago, as Highway A1A and other north-south roads opened to the west, the Florida Department of Transportation was supposed to give up possession of Old Ocean and file a deed that turned it over to the town. For reasons no one is likely ever to figure out, that didn't happen.

To this day, Skrandel says, the state technically retains ownership of the road, though Brinyites have been claiming it and caring for it for generations.

"Throughout the history of Briny, most people have considered it a Briny road, though officially it wasn't," he

The Town Council is trying to change that, approving unanimously a resolution on Oct. 22 that authorizes Skrandel and Mayor Michael Hill to explore an agreement with the FDOT that would transfer the road to the town.

Skrandel says neither the state nor Palm Beach County is interested in owning Old Ocean.

"Palm Beach County is of the opinion it does not own it and does not want it," he said. "FDOT feels they're stuck with it but they're willing to give it to the town."

So the town probably can take over the road for essentially no cost, with the requirement that the road maintains a public purpose and remains open for public use. However, things could get complicated if the town decides to turn it over to the Briny corporation, the holder of all land in the community.

Going forward, any private entity such as the corporation that takes possession of the road from the town would have to pay the state fair market value for the property. Possible changes to coastal traffic flow patterns could also complicate matters.

Ocean Ridge, Briny's northern neighbor, is considering a plan to turn its section of Old Ocean Boulevard into a promenade with one-way traffic running south. Also, plans for construction of a large single-family duplex on Ocean Ridge's section of Old Ocean could send heavy trucks onto Briny streets if work begins next year.

If the town takes formal possession of Old Ocean, it also assumes clear responsibility for maintaining the road and repairing damage.

Skrandel told council members he expected to have more to report from FDOT about the road at Briny's Nov. 19 meeting.

In other business:

• Council President Sue Thaler advised residents who are considering running for mayor or Town Council that the filing period for the March 15 election will run from Nov. 10 until Nov. 24 — roughly three months earlier than usual. The early deadlines are because the presidential preference primary is also to

• The council unanimously approved up to $9,500 to investigate repeated water main failures at Banyan Boulevard and North Heron Drive. Thaler said the cost of the analysis "could be much less" but the town needed to find out how badly corroded the pipe is.

Ocean Ridge

Midlane Road entrance to close for six-month trial period

By Dan Moffett

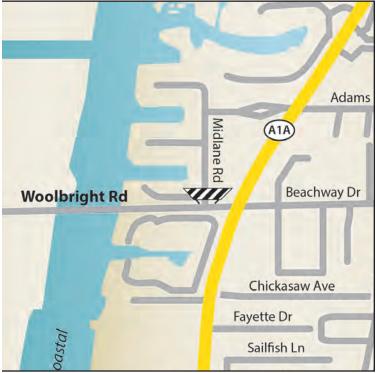

Ocean Ridge commissioners are moving forward with a plan to temporarily close the entrance to Midlane Road at Woolbright Road for six months, in the hope of enhancing crime prevention and safety.

The closing is scheduled to begin on Dec. 2, and Police Chief Hal Hutchins said signs redirecting motorists would go up well before that as part of the town's outreach to inform residents of the new traffic pattern.

Commissioners unanimously approved spending up to $750 to install plastic barricades at the Midlane entrance. Though the road will be inaccessible at Woolbright, Midlane will remain open throughout the six-month trial period.

Mayor Geoff Pugh said crime statistics compiled by Hutchins and reports from residents suggested that the Midlane neighborhood had a higher rate of burglary attempts than elsewhere in the town. Pugh said it was time for the commission to deal with the problem.

"Not doing anything about

A six-month trial period will be used to determine if the temporary barricades at Midlane and Woolbright have helped to reduce crime in the area. SOURCE: Town of Ocean Ridge

Ridge it is what we've been doing for the 13 years I've been sitting up here (on the commission)," Pugh said. If after six months there's no improvement, the mayor said, the town will reopen the entrance and take down the signs. He said if residents don't like the change, the commission is sure to hear about it.

Commissioner Richard Lucibella said the plan is "100 percent reversible" and was worth trying. However, he warned residents they might be sacrificing convenience to improve security.

"Nothing comes for free," Lucibella said.

Commissioners said they would consider adding speed bumps and traffic calming devices next year, depending on how well the Midlane closing works.

Swaim dispute not over

Developer William Swaim is stirring things up again in the lagoon behind Town Hall.

For the last two years, Swaim has repeatedly petitioned the commission to create an easement around Town Hall to allow him access to lots he owns west of the building. Commissioners have told Swaim he must first get permits from the South Florida Water Management District which has denied them, saying the land was environmentally sensitive mangrove wetlands. In May, an administrative law judge in Tallahassee sided with the SFWMD and denied Swaim's appeal.

In October, Swaim's Waterfront ICW Properties company obtained a warranty deed on property owned by Todd Flato and Diana Fenimore. Swaim maintains the lot stretches into the lagoon underneath the docks at the Wellington Arms Condominiums.

Swaim's attorney, Alfred

LaSorte of West Palm Beach, has accused the condos of trespassing and wants Wellington Arms to take down the docks, or pay the developer $50,000 — and also "retract all objections" to Swaim's permitting request to SFWMD. The condo group has hired a lawyer and is contesting the matter.

In other business:

• Commissioners welcomed Jamie Titcomb as new town manager at the Nov. 2 meeting, and said so long to Ken Schenck, who completed nine years on the job.

"It was a little different this morning getting up and thinking I didn't have to go to work," Schenck told the commission.

Titcomb, 59, worked as town manager of Melbourne Beach since 2014 and is the former executive director of the Palm Beach County League of Cities. He will earn about $105,000.

• The town has scheduled its annual Holiday Celebration from 5:30-7:30 p.m. on Dec. 4. Light snacks and beverages will be served and children can expect a visit from Santa. The celebration is open to all residents.

Mayor's Old Ocean plan draws parade of critics

By Dan Moffett

Ocean Ridge Mayor Geoff Pugh may want to make a promenade out of Old Ocean Boulevard but so far he's only created a promenade for skeptics leading to the microphone in Town Hall chambers.

A dozen residents took turns expressing their worries and complaints about Pugh's proposal during the Town Commission meeting Oct. 5, saying it's a bad idea to turn Old Ocean into a southbound one-way street and block off several entrances.

The mayor took the objections in stride, saying the important thing is for officials and residents to begin a dialogue about how the town will handle the changes that growth in communities across the bridges will bring. Pugh said a small town has to have "face-to-face conversation" about its future.

"The intent is to propose ideas so the town gets talking about a subject, and the subject is a compilation of the last 20 years of ideas we've had about Old Ocean," Pugh said. "Change is coming, and it's going to be a very big change in the town of Ocean Ridge, and the town of Briny Breezes and all up and down (the coast) here. We need to make plans not just about tomorrow but for the coming years. This idea is just a way to start us talking about how are we going to manage this change."

Among the comments from critics of Pugh's Old Ocean plan:

• Why try to fix what isn't broken? Residents said they like the road the way it is, there are no safety problems to speak of, the traffic flow is good, and so there is no reason to change things.

"In 25 years, I've walked up and down Old Ocean at least 10,000 times, and I can tell you, car traffic is not a problem," said Bob Weisblut. "I doubt that there's ever been fatality."

• The plan might reduce car traffic but would increase pedestrian and bicycle traffic, which causes problems, too. The reconfigured one-way street will cause problems for dog owners whose pets will be forced to walk in each others' way, some residents said.

"The pedestrian traffic already believes that it is a promenade," said Carol Besler, who lives on Old Ocean. "I have a lot of difficulty getting in and out of my driveway." • The mayor's plan to change the name of the road to Ocean Ridge Boulevard will cause address problems for those who live on the street. It could also diminish property values because of the loss of an iconic name with historic significance.

• Expense. Though the cost of signs and street barricades would be minimal — no more than a few thousand dollars — the money could be better spent on other things.

• The plan is likely to increase the response times of emergency vehicles and force them down narrower streets, some residents argued.

Commissioners have decided to set a date during their Dec. 7 meeting for a workshop on the Old Ocean proposal, probably scheduling it for sometime in January.

The workshop would be a back-and-forth session with the public during which residents are encouraged to give their opinions and ideas, Pugh said.

Highland Beach

City OK with library changes under interim director

By Rich Pollack

Saying they are pleased with the positive changes they're seeing, Highland Beach commissioners have abandoned efforts to bring in a private firm to manage library operations.

Commissioners in August had agreed to invite
Systems and Services Inc. to town so they could learn more about what the company offers
and whether it would make sense for the town to contract
with the firm.

At the time, commissioners felt the library was still in transition from the sudden May departure of longtime director Mari Suarez and might benefit from management by an experienced outside firm.

Even though interim Library Director Suzi Hayes has not yet made a decision about accepting the director position on a long-term basis, commissioners say they no longer see a need to meet with LSSI representatives.

"We found a very capable interim librarian and we don't feel it's necessary to meet with the outside firm," said Commissioner Carl Feldman.

Others on the commission agreed.

"We're seeing very positive improvements initiated by our interim director," said Vice Mayor Bill Weitz. "It makes no sense to take any further action."

Town Manager Beverly Brown said two new assistant librarians have been added to the staff. In addition, Brown said, the library has increased its programming to better serve residents.

"The library is putting on a new face and adding new programs to encourage participation," Brown said.

Hayes and the team at the library have already instituted an electronic book cataloging process to increase efficiency and are preparing a survey to determine what additional programs and services residents would like to see at the library.

Already the library has started an adult coloring club and now has bridge lessons available. Plans are also being made to start tai chi classes and the library now has a refreshed website.

In addition, Brown said, the staff has been adjusting programming schedules to help reduce parking issues.

The town manager said she and Town Attorney Glen Torcivia are working with library staff to develop a policy to address outside vendors teaching classes at the library, due to potential liability issues.

One possible solution being explored is to charge vendors a nominal fee to use town facilities for the classes and then allow instructors to charge participants for the programs.

Wine and cheese put 'fun' in library fundraiser

The Friends of the Highland Beach Library will be welcoming back many of the town's returning residents during the third annual Wine and Cheese Fundraiser, set for 5 to 7 p.m. on Dec. 4 at the library.

Last year's fundraiser drew about 150 people and organizers of this year's event are hoping to attract an even larger gathering.

"Our wine and cheese fundraiser is a fun night out," said co-president Dorothy Kellington. "It's close to home and you can meet your friends and neighbors." The event, which costs $25 per person, will feature a selection of red and white wines as well as a variety of cheeses.

There will also be a Chinese auction with prizes including theater tickets, jewelry, a wine tasting and tea for two.

Money raised will help the library cover the cost of items not included in the town budget, with an emphasis this year on children's programming.

Boca Raton

MyBocaLink.com helps guide city's website users

By Steve Plunkett

Boca Raton has a new Web page to guide residents to its host of social media sites.

Chrissy Biagiotti, the city's new communications and marketing manager, said she created MyBocaLink.com after meeting with the 30 municipal workers who communicate with residents "on a regular basis, either managing social media pages or sending out newsletters."

"It was news to me that we have 15 different Facebook pages in the city," Biagiotti told City Council members Oct. 26. "And we have 11 different Twitter accounts for the city, five Instagram accounts for the city. So if we didn't even know that, then I'm thinking, how do the residents know that?"

Biagiotti said her overall objective is to develop a strong partnership with the community and increase civic engagement by providing timely information that's accessible, understandable, interactive and engaging.

"It sounds simple, but this is an objective that each department needs to be making sure that we're using and utilizing," she said.

"Let's add to that accurate, since we've heard some comments about that," Mayor Susan Haynie said.

Biagiotti called MyBocaLink a "landing page" that includes an index of social media sites. "It's a place for people to go to connect and discover and engage and share," she said.

Councilman Scott Singer asked whether it might be time to get rid of some of the social media pages. Biagiotti answered that she already had shared some protocols with the staff communicators.

"If you're not posting at least four to five times a week as a general rule, then you probably shouldn't have a Facebook page," Biagiotti said.

She also thanked everyone on staff who had helped her gather details for the media.

"A lot of our residents still get their information from the newspaper and from the television news," Biagiotti said. "So we have to make sure that we are responding in a timely way to the reporters and bloggers that are calling for information." The city's main website, www.myboca. us, has more than 800 pages of information, she said. *

Boca Raton

Airport Authority studies options for legal work

By Rich Pollack

The Boca Raton Airport Authority is considering asking for proposals from law firms interested in representing the agency, but that step could end up costing the authority more money than it is paying its current firm.

During its October meeting, the authority agreed to table a vote on whether to seek requests for qualifications from outside firms until additional information is gathered.

In a presentation to the authority members, Executive Director Clara Bennett said the authority has been using its current law firm, Berger Singerman, since August 2006.

The firm, which provides a wide range of legal services and has experience working with Federal Aviation Administration and Florida Department of Transportation regulations, has billed the authority at an all-inclusive hourly rate of $250 since it was first contracted.

Bennett said she surveyed 10 other general aviation airports and found hourly rates varied depending on the practice area, ranging from $150 an hour to more than $500 an hour.

"If we have a rate of only $250 an hour in today's world, that's amazing," said board member Bill Schwartz.

Other members of the authority, however, indicated they would like to see what other firms would charge and suggested going ahead with issuing a request for qualifications.

"Our goal is to get the best possible legal representation at the most affordable price," said authority member Robert Weinroth, who also is Boca Raton's vice mayor.

Weinroth added that he is not unhappy with the quality of work provided by Berger Singerman.

"Prior to joining this board I had reservations about outside counsel," he said, adding his opinion has changed. "I've been satisfied with the services we're receiving."

In responding to comments from board members, Berger Singerman's Dawn Meyers — a partner of the firm's government and regulatory team and lead attorney working with the airport authority said keeping the rate of $250 an hour has been a source of contention within the firm.

She said the airport authority is the only client that has not seen a rate increase over the course of nine years and that there has been pressure from within for an adjustment.

"$250 an hour is 45 percent of my standard rate," Meyers

Should the board choose to go ahead with testing the waters, Meyers said, her firm would mostly likely submit a proposal but at a higher rate.

"I can tell you we will not bid at $250 an hour," she said. "There are certain things I cannot control."

During her presentation, Bennett told board members that the authority has spent $233,000 on legal fees so far this year out of its operating budget. It also has spent close to $70,000 on legal fees associated with capital projects.

Bennett also said that the authority received significant reimbursements from the state and federal government for legal fees and that it would not be eligible for those reimbursements were it to hire an in-house counsel.

After the board agreed to table the decision on whether to issue a request for qualifications, authority member George Brown suggested a possible alternative means of reducing legal fees.

"There may be an opportunity to further manage the cost by having staff doing some of the work," he said. "These are the kinds of things we can look at." 🛪

Gulf Stream

Town staff working overtime to satisfy records requests

By Dan Moffett

Gulf Stream may be the only municipality in South Florida where residents don't have to guess what's going on inside Town Hall.

On any given day, it's a safe bet that the town's employees are working on public records requests — because that has become most of what they do, according to a town report produced as part of a new public records policy adopted last year.

During the fiscal year that ended in September, Gulf Stream fielded 428 new requests for town records, nearly all of them from residents Martin O'Boyle and Chris O'Hare. Between them, the two men have filed dozens of lawsuits against the town and made several thousand requests for records since 2013.

To comply with the requests, Kelly Avery, a full-time employee, worked 1,742 hours last year, roughly 95 percent of the time she put in. Carol Mahoney, a temporary worker the town hired to handle requests from O'Boyle and O'Hare, worked 2,080 hours.

"Out of an office of five employees," said Mayor Scott Morgan, "two devoted almost all their time to public records requests."

All told, counting work done also by the Town Clerk Rita Taylor, accountant Rebecca Tew, Police Chief Garrett Ward and Town Manager William Thrasher, Gulf Stream devoted 4,913 hours — roughly the equivalent of 2.5 full-time positions — to records requests.

"Appalling," said Vice Mayor Robert Ganger.

The report doesn't capture all the stress on the staff, officials say, or extra time on the job. Taylor, who is not an hourly employee, has been working seven days a week for the last two years.

O'Boyle and O'Hare have 40 suits pending against the town alleging noncompliance with their records requests, besides at least nine more cases over other matters. The two have complained that officials have violated the state's Sunshine Law by withholding information, failing to comply promptly or overcharging for copying documents.

"The town has acted lawfully in all of the cases," Morgan said in a recent letter to all residents. "However, under current Florida public records law, we cannot collect reasonable legal fees from the plaintiffs, even when we win. Thus, we must win these cases — just to put an end to them. Paying money to these litigants only validates their outrageous behavior and encourages them and others to pursue similar methods of public records abuse."

On Oct. 8, lawyers for the town filed an appeal of their RICO class action against O'Boyle and O'Hare that alleges the two conspired to use public records requests to extort money from municipalities and businesses across the state. In June, U.S. District Court Judge Kenneth Marra threw out the suit, ruling that the complaint did not meet legal requirements for action under the federal Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act.

O'Boyle told the commission in September that the $1 million the town is budgeting for legal fees is "absurd, outrageous, beyond the pale." He said he wanted to negotiate an end to the cases, and proposed forming a panel made up of town officials and residents to broker a deal.

"The way we resolve it is we slug it out, somebody dies, somebody goes broke, or we sit down and negotiate a settlement," O'Boyle said.

O'Hare told commissioners the RICO suit is hurting his business — Pineapple Grove Designs, which makes cast stone architectural art. He said it will cost the town millions more in legal fees unless officials admit their mistakes and negotiate.

"Every time you make a mistake that affects me, I'm going to go to a judge and adjudicate it," O'Hare said.

Morgan said the men should put their settlement proposals in writing and give them to the town's lawyers. He said the town is open to negotiation.

"The ball is in the litigants' court," Morgan said. "I have stated numerous times that if the litigants will discontinue their lawsuits, I will recommend discontinuing our RICO action."

Delray Beach

Smaller scale sought in new building guidelines

The Delray Beach Planning and Zoning Board on Oct. 19 passed the final portion of the design guidelines for the city's eastern half. Next they will be reviewed by the City Commission.

The guidelines cover architectural styles to "ensure harmony in proportion, scale and materials" for what is appropriate in Delray Beach, said consultant Anthea Gianniotes. The city already limited new buildings to four stories in its downtown.

She wants architects to design for the Florida climate and not to mix styles. For projects more than 100,000 square feet, she suggested a model submitted along with the site plan.

Board members asked for screening of mechanical equipment on roofs and specifying the thickness of asphalt shingles.

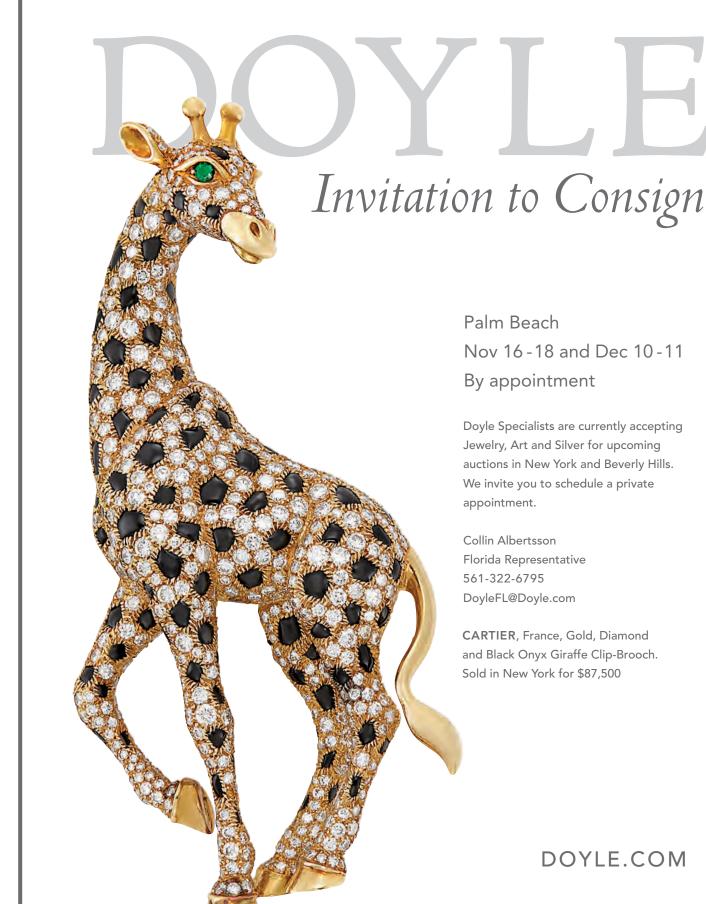

Along the retail streets of Atlantic Avenue, Pineapple Grove Way and Ocean Boulevard, new buildings should be only 75 feet wide.

But Gianniotes did not suggest a length limit for buildings on other streets, such as Federal Highway.

Mayor Cary Glickstein had wanted something offered to break up what he called massive structures that are nearly two football fields long, such as the Aloft hotel and condominium project that was reviewed in early October.

"There are no easy answers," Gianniotes said.

Condo can prune sea grapes — but must protect turtles

By Sallie James

A beachside condominium can prune native sea grape trees that are obstructing ocean views if special measures are taken to protect nesting sea turtles, the city's Environmental Advisory Board has decided.

must shield or screen lights that are exposed when the vegetation is trimmed, and require condo owners to tint or cover windows that might expose turtle hatchlings to additional lighting, according to a report by Boca's senior environmental officer, Nora Fosman.

The 8- to 10-inch leaves of the sea grape help shield sea turtles from the invasive artificial light of beach development. The shrub's sprawling structure also stabilizes sand dunes, helping to prevent erosion.

The condo can prune about 700 feet of sea grapes, but must leave 100 feet untouched, according to Chrissy Biagiotti, Boca's communications and marketing manager. The 16-foot-tall sea grapes located along the eastern side of State Road A1A would be trimmed to 4 feet in height.

A 200-foot-wide viewing corridor is planned on the north, and a 500-foot-wide corridor is planned on the south, Fosman's report said.

The condo would be prohibited from trimming any sea grapes located within 10 feet of an existing sea turtle nest.

It is not the first time such projects have been approved. The Ocean Club condominium project was completed in November 2009; the Spanish River Park project was completed in June 2012; and the Boca Raton Yacht and Racquet Club project was completed in March 2014.

A permit from the Florida Department of Environmental Protection is required because trimming can increase lighting levels on beaches and disorient hatchlings.

Keen attention must be paid to the effect on nesting sea turtles, because Boca has the highest sea turtle nesting density of any urban area in the country, Fosman's report said

According to the Sea Turtle Conservancy, hatchlings can become disoriented by lighting near the beach and wander inland, where they often die when they are run over, become dehydrated or are eaten by predators.

Scientists believe turtle hatchlings have a natural instinct that propels them in the direction of the brightest light, which would normally be moonlight reflecting off the ocean, the Sea Turtle Conservancy said. Artificial lights often draw the hatchlings inland, where they are killed.

Hillsboro El Rio Park could cost $3 million to develop

By Sallie James

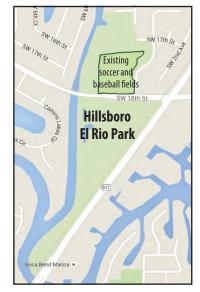

A plan to develop the south end of Hillsboro El Rio Park — an area once used as a city dump — would cost about $3 million, according to Boca Raton City Manager Leif Ahnell.

The north end of the park at 499 SW 18th St. was developed years ago and includes soccer and baseball fields. The future of the park's south end was discussed during a recent City Council workshop meeting.

The project could be pricey because special permits would be required to build anything near the mangrove swamp, and remediation would be required to develop anything on the area previously used for a landfill.

Suggestions ranged from a waterfront kayak launch that would allow paddlers to glide silently among leafy mangroves, to construction of a jogging and fitness trail, a playground, picnic pavilions and restroom facilities.

The property is west of South Dixie Highway and north of Southwest 18th Street.

The development proposals stem from a May workshop that was attended by about 45 city residents. About a third of those in attendance made the suggestions, noted Dan Grippo, municipal services director.

Council member Scott Singer wondered if enough residents had weighed in on the park development to justify moving ahead.

"I want to make sure we are getting a representative sample,"

Singer said. "I don't want to hold this as sacrosanct if it really is just 15 residents at one particular meeting."

Cost estimates to develop the property range from about $3 million to more than $7 million, depending on the amenities and remediation required for the area that previously served as a landfill, said Ian Nestler of PGAL, a firm of architects, designers, engineers and planners.

'We're talking about a pretty big investment," said City Council member Jeremy Rodgers. "I think we need to get more input."

The biggest expense would be remediating the dump at a cost of $300,000 per acre, Nestler said. The landfill is composed of about 14 acres.

Glenn Gromann, a member of the city's Planning and Zoning Board, said the city could run into big trouble if it disturbs the old landfill and discovers something that is costly to clean up.

"The problem with uncovering a site of this nature is that you get what you pay for,"

FAMILY OWNED AND OPERATED IN BOCA RATON SINCE 1968

Gromann said. "If a significant amount of contamination were uncovered, that would be ... on the city's dime. That we might have to seek federal assistance for potential cleanup is my only concern."

Ahnell said city staff will take into consideration what was said at the workshop and come back with a proposal in a month. He estimated a cost of $500,000 each for development and a master plan, and $2 million to remediate the landfill property, for a total of $3 million. *

Online option for renewing beach parking permits

By Sallie James

Residents who need to renew their annual beach parking permits can now do it by mail or email.

"It seems so archaic to make everyone stand in line at our community centers. How wonderful that we are doing it through the mail and Internet," Boca Raton Mayor Susan Haynie said at a recent City Council meeting.

City officials also renamed the $57 annual permit to "vehicle entry permit."

The permits are issued for Spanish River Park, South Beach Park and Red Reef Park. City residents and property owners of the Greater Boca Raton Beach and Park District are eligible for the permits.

Property owners who live west of Florida's Turnpike and/ or north of Clint Moore Road have access only to South Beach Park.

The changes provide a more "customer friendly" way of issuing the permits, said Boca Raton Recreation Services Director Mickey Gomez.

"We're no longer requiring the resident to come to one of our three community centers to prove residency and receive a beach permit," Gomez explained during an Oct. 14 City Council meeting. "We are now allowing them to apply online through an online application process and we will simply send them a permit."

To renew your permit online, go to: www.ci.boca-raton.fl.us/ pages/beaches/where-obtainbeach-permit.

Residents are required to provide current proof of residency and current vehicle ownership to receive a permit. The following documents are required for such:

- Proof of residency requires one of the following original documents: current city/county tax bill; water bill; Florida Power & Light bill; rental/lease agreement; current driver's license; or a notarized letter from a condo association. University students and faculty residing on campus may establish residency by submitting a signed letter by the director of housing certifying that they live on campus.
- Proof of vehicle ownership requires one of the following original documents: current motor vehicle registration; title; current bill of sale; vehicle rental/lease agreement in applicant's name; or current insurance card for each vehicle. Applicants will be required to also provide their license plate numbers if they are not on their documentation.

Residents who still want to apply/renew their vehicle entry permits in person can still do so at the following city locations:

- Boca Raton Community Center, 150 Crawford Blvd.
- James A. Rutherford Community Center at Patch Reef Park, 2000 W. Yamato Road
- Sugar Sand Park Community Center, 300 S. Military Trail
- City Hall, 201 W. Palmetto Park Road 🛪

the next 20 to 50 years, we're going to really see some rising tides."

Petrolia said a regional approach is needed to deal with sea level rise. Remedies worth considering, she said, include opening natural areas along the Intracoastal Waterway that could hold water and blocking off inlets during extreme tide events

The vice mayor said Delray Beach should begin work now to prevent future flooding problems. She favors a ban on underground parking lots, increasing the minimum floor height for new buildings and studying the cost of higher sea walls.

Extreme tides in late September and October forced the Sea Mist III drift boat to delay or cancel offshore fishing trips. Strong tides made the 72-foot drift sit too high in the water to fit under the A1A bridge at Boynton Inlet, so the captain had to wait for the outgoing tide before heading out. Some trips were canceled.

At Lantana Beach, waves pushed up the beach by a stout easterly wind combined with the Oct. 27 high tide pounded the sea wall and gnawed off the wooden steps to the lifeguard stand.

"I've found it fascinating," said Silvia Adelman, who watched water come up through storm drains and puddle on yards near her home in Boynton Isles. "It's all good until it goes in my house."

Multiple factors in play

The late September and late October tides were extreme because of special alignment of celestial bodies called perigean spring tide — when the new or full moon coincides with the perigee of the moon, or the point at which the moon is closest to Earth in its orbit.

Extreme tides are predictable, but the tides of Sept. 28 and Oct. 27 were above predicted levels in South Florida. The morning high tide at the Lake Worth Pier on Oct. 27 was 5 feet above the mean low water level, about a foot higher than forecast.

Stephen Gill, chief scientist with NOAA's Center for Operational Oceanographic Products and Services in Silver Spring, Md., said the fall perigean spring tide tends to be exceptionally high in South Florida because sea levels are already relatively high during the fall.

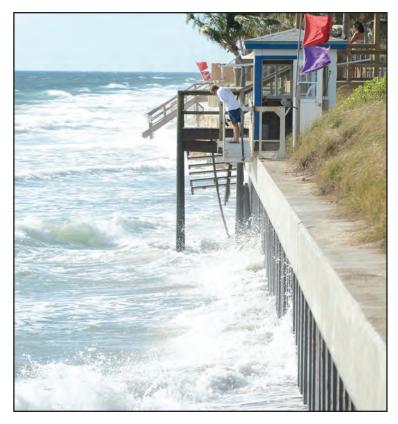

A slowing of the Gulf Stream current flow, warm ocean water temperatures and easterly winds push water levels even higher.

Sea level rise contributes, too. But so far, that's been a slow increase — about 10 inches every 100 years in Miami Beach and 13 inches per century at the Lake Worth pier, NOAA tide records show.

Palm Beach County Commissioner Steven Abrams, whose district covers coastal sections of southern Palm Beach County, waded through water on Lake Drive, a neighborhood street south of Palmetto Park Road in Boca Raton, to call attention to the problem.

"Wading in it, you realize the depth of the problem," said Abrams, who recently returned from a conference on sea level rise.

Cities take varied approaches

Some cities and towns are already taking steps to hold back the water, while others are living with "nuisance" flooding or documenting the extent of the tidal floods to prepare for future work.

In Delray Beach, water covered roads near the city marina. In the hours around high tide, waves from passing boats washed over Marine Way. Schools of small mullet moved through the shallow water on the road at times to the delight of neighborhood dogs.

High water is nothing new for Marine Way resident David Frohman. He said water sometimes flows into the crawl space under his historic house and soaks his floor, forcing him to put his best furniture on blocks. Frohman stacked sand bags beside his house in late October to hold back the water.

Delray Beach officials posted a tidal flood warning on the city's website and barricaded flood-prone areas, including roads in the Marina Historic District.

John Morgan, the city's sustainability officer, said Delray Beach has installed one-way valves to keep salt water from flooding streets in some low areas, but he said much more work is needed.

"A number of spots near the Intracoastal Waterway have been problematic for years," Morgan said. "It's getting worse as climate is changing."

to reduce flooding should be complete in the next few months, Morgan said.

"Raising sea walls and docks is a policy issue that we will have to bring to the commission at a later date," Morgan said.

Lantana has installed pumps and water-holding structures on Hypoluxo Island and recently elevated the parking lot at the town beach to minimize flooding.

But the flooding of the parking lot near the boat ramps at Sportsman's Park is a nuisance town officials say they can live with, at least for now.

"For something that happens every so often, it's not a concern at this time," Mayor David Stewart said.

Stewart, who has lived on the water in Hypoluxo Island since the late 1970s, said this fall's king tides are the highest he's seen since 1984.

The occasional "tidal wash" in the parking lot at Ocean Inlet Park during extreme tide events is not significant enough to warrant improvements, Palm Beach County Parks and Recreation Director Eric Call said.

The town of Gulf Stream is amending its code so sea walls can be built a foot higher than in the past, an effort to hold back sea water during storms and extreme tide events.

The town is sealing drainage pipes to reduce leakage and checking backflow prevention valves, Town Manager William Thrasher said.

Briny Breezes is building a new sea wall around its marina that's designed to hold back high water, but the work is not yet complete — partly because contractors have not had the low-water conditions they need to finish the work this fall, said Michael Gallacher, president of Briny Breezes Inc.

"The high tides are not topping the new sea wall," Gallacher said.

At Boynton Harbor Marina, occasional parking lot flooding is not considered serious enough at this point to warrant spending money for improvements — at least not for the parts of the marina owned by the city's community redevelopment agency.

The city of Boynton Beach is considering drainage improvements and installing one-way valves to reduce tidal flooding as part of its stormwater master plan, but problems such as inadequate sea walls on private property will have to be addressed by property owners, Assistant City Manager Carisse LeJeune said.

LeJeune said the area of Boynton Beach east of Federal Highway from Northeast Seventh Avenue to Northeast 10th Avenue is prone to tidal flooding.

During the full-moon high tide in late October, water covered the parking lot at the Harbour Hall Inlet Club condominiums on Northeast Seventh Street in Boynton Beach.

"I dropped my wind insurance, but I kept my flood insurance," said Barbara Shore, who lives near the condominiums on Northeast 10th Avenue.

In Ocean Ridge, extreme tides push water into the natural areas on the east side of the Ocean Avenue Bridge, causing sections of Ocean Avenue to "The state assured us they would put backflow preventers on the 16-inch pipes, but did not," Mayor Geoff Pugh said. "Through a series of elevation changes, water backs up onto the roadway."

Boca Raton officials monitored low-lying areas such as Lake Wyman and Silver Palm parks during the late October high tides, but the city is not planning improvements to reduce tidal flooding, city spokeswoman Chrissy Biagiotti said.

Water puddled on a section of Lake Drive, south of Palmetto Park Road, on the morning of Oct. 27, but it was less severe than the flooding around Delray Beach's marina.

"The impact to us compared to other areas of the county is minimal," Biagiotti said.

Collector's finely crafted ivory figures span time and cultures

By Ron Hayes

The romance began one spring day in 1993 when Bob Weisblut met a Chinese beauty bearing flowers.

He was the retired owner of a Washington, D.C., alarm company called Total Protection.

She was 12 inches tall and made of ivory.

"I'd gone to this auction house that was having a sale of government-confiscated items," he remembers. "It was mostly just pimp jewelry, but this one ivory carving of a lady with flowers caught my eye. I bid up to $200 and then dropped out, so I didn't get it. But I was intrigued."

Not long after, Weisblut came south to his winter home in Ocean Ridge and soon found Roberts Auction Galleries in Lake Worth.

The Chinese woman bearing flowers had eluded him, but an elderly Chinese man bearing a staff, probably carved in Hong Kong in the late 19th century, became his for $800.

Today, that elderly Chinese man shares a long glass case in Weisblut's home office, along with nearly 200 other pieces of carved ivory art.

Here's an 18th-century bust of the French philosopher Voltaire, shaped from an elephant tusk. An ear of corn being nibbled by mice was once a hippo's incisor. The schooner Wanona, built in 1897, is immortalized in scrimshaw on a sperm whale's tooth. There's a sailing ship coaxed from a walrus tusk.

The case is home to the utilitarian — a clock, a bucket for holy water — and the purely aesthetic— chrysanthemums and roses.

You look. You frown. You lean a bit closer and look again.

Castor, one of the heavens' Gemini twins, emerges from an egg shell.

An egg shell!

How, you wonder, could anyone do such finely detailed work? This is Michelangelo in miniature, da Vinci with a blade.

"After I got that first piece, the Chinese man, I wanted more," Weisblut says, "but I had to learn what was there and how much it should cost and how to tell if it was real or not."

In 1996, he founded the International Ivory Society, a collectors' club, and as its membership grew to more than 200 members worldwide, Weisblut's knowledge grew, too, along with a private library of nearly 300 art books.

"Ivory is the dentin portion of any mammal's tooth. You and I have dentin," he explains. "A tusk is any tooth that's visible outside the mouth. If you can close the mouth and still see it, it's a tusk."

There are five sources of ivory, he will tell you — elephants and extinct mammoths; whales and narwhals; hippopotamuses; walruses and the pig family. The only continent without a history of ivory carving is South America, where artisans work in bone rather than dentin.

"The oldest piece I have is 17th century," Weisblut says, "but a nude fertility object was found in Germany that's 35,000 years old."

Collectors big and small

The cost of collecting ranges from reasonable to really expensive.

"The most expensive piece I have cost me a couple thousand," Weisblut says, "but you can get bracelets and necklaces for $10 or $15 at antique shows because they're out of fashion. You don't see movie stars wearing ivory anymore. Nobody collects them. But I've also seen a 300-pound mammoth tusk that was completely carved selling in China for $250,000."

Some people collect cars and some collect baseball cards. Old LPs and electric trains.

Bob Weisblut favors ivory. "Each of my items is unique," he says, "and they reflect the times in which they were made. I have that bucket for holy water, and that bust of Voltaire. People wouldn't be carving Voltaire today. I find that fascinating. They reflect both their culture and their times."

And along with ivory, he also relishes a touch of irony.

Among the roses and chrysanthemums in the case, the sailing ships and scrimshaw, the figurines and clocks, there rests a special ivory carving Weisblut had made for his own amusement.

FWS may tighten ivory trade rules

By Ron Hayes

Every piece of ivory in the world once belonged to a living creature. A whale, a walrus, most often an elephant.

And every year, about 30,000 African elephants are slaughtered by poachers, who sell the tusks to illegal traders. More than 100,000 were killed between 2009 and 2012, according to an investigation by National Geographic.

In the United States, regulation of ivory is controlled by the federal Fish and Wildlife Service, which is currently reviewing proposals to tighten the requirements for the import, export and sale of ivory items.

Bob Weisblut, president of the International Ivory Society, agrees with the goal, but quarrels with some of the details, especially regarding the sale of antique ivory within the

"I'm all for saving elephants," says Weisblut, who lives in Ocean Ridge, "but I don't think making the sale of antique ivory illegal is going to save any elephants or stop poaching."

For example, under the new proposals, sale of items across state lines would be permitted only if the elephant ivory was imported before 1990, is 100 years old or older, hasn't been repaired or modified since 1973 or contains less than 200 grams of ivory, such as decorative pieces on a musical instrument.

And the burden of proof would rest with the seller.

"How do I know how much the ivory on a piano key weighs?" Weisblut asks. "Or the inlay on a silver chafing dish?"

How can he prove conclusively that a piece he bought in an auction house hasn't been repaired since 1973, or its actual age?

Ivory collectors, Weisblut says, are at the mercy of the information provided by the dealers from whom they

"And remember," he adds, "not all ivory comes from poachers. Elephants die natural deaths, too."

Gavin Shire, a spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Service, defended the proposed regulations.

'As far as we're concerned, this is not only common sense but also essential for the preservation of African elephants," he said. "If poaching continues at current rates, we'll witness their potential extinction, and the U.S. has a role to play here."

The department is reviewing comments on the proposal, the spokesman said, but no date for a decision has been set.

If Fish and Wildlife accepts the changes, Congress would not have to approve them.

As for Weisblut, he predicts legal challenges.

"This will go on for years," he said. "I'll go to the Miami shows in January, but I'd hate to buy something I may never be allowed to sell." *

10 Questions

The impact coastal Boca Raton resident Karen Sweetapple has made on the South County charity scene continues to change the lives of those served by local nonprofits.

The 57-year-old wife and mother has given the gift of volunteerism to organizations aiding the poor and sick, boards supporting schools and students and, most recently, an initiative awarding high-impact grants to area agencies.

Sweetapple will receive a Women of Grace award Nov. 11 at Bethesda Hospital Foundation's annual fundraising luncheon.

"I just decided one day I was going to volunteer because it makes you feel great," she said. "It's really fulfilling to know that you're making a difference."

Sweetapple began volunteering when her four children, now ages 17 to 26, were little. For 10 years, she served on the American Cancer Society board and founded its young professionals group.

For nine years, she served on the Gulf Stream School board and chaired its annual fund. As her children got older, she involved them in programs helping the hungry, including delivering meals for Boca Helping Hands.

The ultimate family project comprised an assembly line that, once a month for several years, turned 10 loaves of bread, dozens of packages of lunch meat and assorted jars of peanut butter and jelly into sandwiches for CROS Ministries' The Caring Kitchen.

Last month, Sweetapple took on another gig: Student ACES. Her daughter belongs to the 501(c)3 dedicated to teaching leadership skills to young athletes. Mom stopped at Panera Bread to bring bagels — 130 of them — to the meeting.

Her work with Palm Beach County Impact 100 earned her the Women of Grace nomination. In the four years since she joined the cause, she has served as board member, chairwoman of the public relations committee and, currently, co-president. The organization makes $100,000 donations to program-based, results-oriented charities in Boca Raton and Delray Beach.

"Volunteering is just part of my roots, being from the Midwest, helping your neighbor out," the Iowa native said. "They say that good deeds contribute to good karma or future happiness, but I think it's immediate."

Q. Where did you grow up and go to school? How do you think that has influenced you?

A. While I have Midwestern roots, I was an Army brat and lived all over the U.S. during most of my childhood. Finally settling in Florida gave me a wonderful sense of home.

Audubon bridge project work finally begins

By Dan Moffett

After months of false starts and frustration, work has begun on the Audubon Causeway bridge project.

Manalapan Mayor Pro
Tem Peter Isaac said Drawdy
Construction of Lake Worth is on the job, horse apple trees have been transplanted offsite, motion-activated traffic lights are in place and he expects the aging bridge to be replaced within the nine-month contractual deadline.

"The south side is to be completed by the end of February," Isaac said, "and the north side by July."

He said Drawdy "is looking to accelerate" the pace of work as much as possible, though there are "a lot of unknowns, such as depth of pilings" that could stall progress.

Work will be suspended during the holiday weeks of Thanksgiving and Christmas, Isaac said, and demolition of the old structure will move forward in stages beginning in November.

"It's not going to be done by dynamite. It's not going to be done by wrecking ball," he said. "They're actually going to saw pieces out of it and then take them away."

The new span will be one foot higher than the old one and is expected to last for about 50 years. The town is hoping to keep the cost of the project under $1 million.

In other business:

• Town Hall has a new $20,000 phone system up and running to improve communication with officials, residents, police, fire-rescue services and also the larger world.

"The other one was 15 years old and needed to be replaced," said Town Clerk Lisa Petersen. "The new one is much more advanced. The phones are integrated with the computer system."

The new system enables the town to keep logs of incoming and outgoing phone calls.

- Chauncey Johnstone is representing the Town Commission in talks with La Coquille Club and the Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa. Some club members have complained about billing practices that require them to use personal credit cards to back up their membership cards when paying for services. Club and hotel employees say they've had problems with unpaid bills run up on the membership cards. Johnstone said he hopes to have possible solutions for the commission to consider at the Nov. 17 town meeting.
- During the Oct. 27 meeting, commissioners gave unanimous final approval to a new noise ordinance that sets a 65-decibel limit for residents during the daytime and a 55-decibel limit at night. The commission also gave unanimous preliminary approval to an ordinance that allows construction of flat roofs in the town.

Commissioners also passed a resolution that gives residents who wish to put landscaping on their swales a list of plants the town suggests.

Commission giving CRA advisory board 'a shot'

By Jane Smith

Two Boynton Beach residents, recently ousted from the city's Community Redevelopment Agency board, spoke against creating a citizen advisory board to the CRA. At the Oct. 20 City Commission meeting, James "Buck" Buchanan and former Mayor Woodrow Hay advised the city commissioners not to go forward with the plans.

Buchanan read his letter into the record: "The formation of the citizens' CRA advisory board would incur expenses such as CRA staff time, a court reporter at the meetings and training in Sunshine Law, tax increment funding, etc. To justify these costs, it is necessary to determine how effective the advisory board would be in working with the commission."

He said commissioners were not listening to the people, who wanted independent citizens on the board. He ended, "A fluff advisory board does not begin to replace voting positions that have real impact on the course of the CRA."

Hay said he agreed with Buchanan "110 percent." Hay explained the Florida Statutes section on governing bodies sitting as the CRA board.

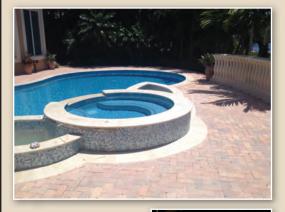

"I want you to understand that you don't have any higher responsibility than the citizens serving on the board. Everyone is equal on that CRA board," he said. "We all have one vote."

Three others said the guidelines for the advisory board members were vague.

But the Commission OK'd the creation of the CRA advisory board by a 4-1 vote. Commissioner David Merker voted no because he wanted two citizens on the board. City Commissioner Mike Fitzpatrick, who voted against removing Buchanan and Hay, voted for the citizen advisory board. He said, "I'll give it a shot."

CRA has corrected some of audit's findings

By Jane Smith

The Community Redevelopment Agency in Delray Beach successfully addressed 10 of 19 items found by state auditors in 2013, board members learned in early October.

Five additional items were partially corrected and four remain uncorrected, according to the follow-up report from the audit conducted by the state Auditor General's Office.

"Auditors have to find stuff, that's their jobs," said CRA member Paul Zacks. He liked the tighter controls over nonprofit donations.

For finding No. 15 that questioned expenditures for food and decorative items, CRA member Bill Branning said the expenses were related to CRA activities and events. "I appreciate the staff's efforts to tighten up," he said.

At the second October meeting, the CRA executive director gave board members a revised staff response to the partially corrected and uncorrected findings. That response was forwarded to the state Auditor General's Office before it issues a final report.

Two findings addressed money given to nonprofits. In March 2014, the CRA secured a state Attorney General's informal opinion that said, "Ultimately, however, the determination of whether a particular project satisfies the terms of the act is to be made by redevelopment agency itself."

The CRA has a policy to determine whether the nonprofit needs the money and limits funding in most cases to a maximum of 25 percent of the organization's budget.

In the case of the Arts
Garage, operated by the Creative City Collaborative, the CRA is withholding this financial year's $275,000 until it receives a complete financial audit that shows the Delray Beach CRA tax dollars were not used for the organization's site in Pompano Beach.

Also, the Arts Garage has not raised the $2.5 million needed to buy its Delray Beach site from the city, prompting the mayor to recommend it merge operations with Old School Square. CRA board member Branning, who is chairman of OSS, is working on that deal with his counterpart at the Arts Garage.

"We are only interested in the Delray Beach location," Branning said.

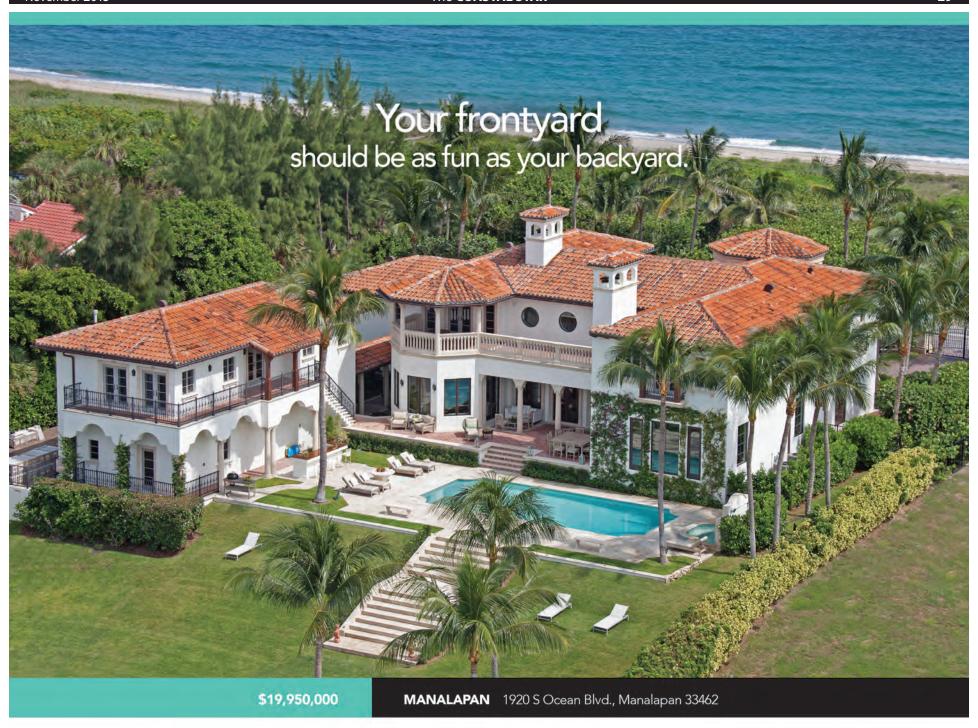

The CRA money given to the Arts Garage sparked the audit in 2013. Delray Beach resident Gerry Franciosa, president of Delray Citizens Coalition Board, thought CRAs should not be giving tax dollars to music and entertainment venues, even if they are nonprofit. It became an issue in the 2013 Delray Beach mayoral race.

The audit was requested by state Sen. Jeff Clemens, D-Lake Worth, in March 2013. Joint legislative auditing committee Chairman Joseph Abruzzo, D-Wellington, then ordered the review into how the CRA is spending its tax dollars. The audit results were released in September 2013.

The state auditing procedure gave the CRA 18 months to address the findings, and then the state reviewed the corrections.

Town resorts to barter when Eau asks for temporary easement

By Mary Thurwachter

After a prickly reception from Lantana Town Council on Oct. 12, Eau Palm Beach Resort's project construction manager Damian Presiga won the resort the temporary beach easement it sought — but not without a swap. In this case, Eau Palm Beach will rebuild the south stairs at the town's beach, which washed away in a storm.

Presiga told council members that the five-star resort was renovating its outdoor Breeze restaurant and pool deck and needed the easement for loading pavers and other construction materials. He assured the town that the sea wall would not be affected and that the resort would reimburse the town for attorney's fees and costs to draft and record the easement.

"We're just, as neighbors, asking for this," Presiga said. "If things get damaged, we'll take care of it."

Eau Palm Beach (formerly the Ritz-Carlton Palm Beach) and the town of Lantana have been beach neighbors for years but the relationship hasn't always been genial.

"They consistently park on our lot, they turn tractor trailers around in the (beach) parking lot and they consistently haven't been the most ideal neighbors," said Mayor Dave Stewart. "They have blocked our access to the beach by blocking our road."

Council Member Lynn Moorhouse said he remembers a time when residents weren't allowed walk on "their" beach. "When the spa was being built the (town's beach) parking lot was abused," council member Tom Deringer added.

"They haven't been nice and now they want us to play nice," Stewart said. "We're kidding about this, but it's a serious problem. You haven't been good to us. If we wanted to be hardnosed we'd make you bring pavers through the lobby. Our beach is our crown jewel and you can't abuse it."

Stewart asked for strict regulation and Presiga said the resort would hire someone to police the project to handle any problems.

"I want some assurances this isn't going to screw up," Stewart said. "We need to make sure the road stays open."

"You have my assurance," Presiga said. He also said that employees were told not to park on the town's beach lot at night and that they could be fined.

"We're aware of problems and we're trying to alleviate them," he said.

The temporary easement is good through Nov. 30 and work is underway. If the work extends beyond Nov. 30, the resort has to pay $1,000 a day, according to the agreement it has with the town.

Construction of the beach stairs needs to be completed within two weeks after the town receives approval from the Florida Department of Environmental Protection and after sea turtle nesting season.

Council Member Phil Aridas offered his own form of payback if work wasn't completed as stipulated by the council.

"The mayor and I will walk through the lobby in our bathrobes every day," he joked.

Work starting on I-95 Woolbright interchange

By Jane Smith

Motorists who use the Interstate 95 interchange at Woolbright Road will see construction equipment move into the area as the contractor starts work on the nearly two-year construction project.

Woolbright Road will be widened from Southwest 18th Street (west side of the interstate) east to Southwest Second Street. At times only one travel lane would be open in each direction, said Andrea Pacini, spokeswoman for I-95 interchange improvements.

The $9.1 million design-build project will require lane closures this year and continue throughout the project's duration until the estimated summer 2017 completion, Pacini said. Ramp and I-95 lane closures are permitted only between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m., Sunday through Thursday, she said.

Plans also call for dual left-turn lanes in both eastbound and westbound directions onto I-95, widening the northbound ramp to receive the dual eastbound turn lanes and transition to one lane, rebuilding the south exit ramp to allow traffic to flow freely onto westbound Woolbright, retrofitting bridge railings to meet current criteria for Woolbright Road bridges over I-95 and CSX tracks, and milling and resurfacing the entire width of Woolbright within the project limits.

Other improvements include bridge construction, barrier walls, curbs, sidewalks, guardrails, drainage, utility relocation, overhead signs, signage and pavement markings, signals, lighting and retaining walls.

The design was led by BCC Engineering Inc.'s Fort Lauderdale office and the contractor is Community Asphalt Corp.'s West Palm Beach office.

Resident: Water tower 'eyesore' is no centerpiece

By Mary Thurwachter

The site plan for Water Tower Commons has yet to come before the Lantana Town Council but one resident is already taking issue with the development's name.

Arthur C. Brooks wrote a letter to the Lantana Chamber of Commerce on the subject after the group had seen preliminary plans for the new development at the former A.G. Holley site and vocalized his concerns again at the Oct. 26 Town Council meeting.

"It is inconceivable to me that the developer would spend roughly $16 million to purchase the site, with plans to spend tens of millions more to develop it, and make the centerpiece a 60-year-old eyesore of a water tower that I believe most residents would like to see torn down," Brooks wrote.

Brooks, who also is a member of Lantana's zoning board, told the council that he "liked water towers as much as the next guy," but that this tower had no distinguishing

"Lake Worth's water tower looks like a balloon and you can see it from the water, but you can't see this (127-foot) tower from the water or from I-95," he said. "It's not iconic or a historic landmark. This water tower only served A.G. Holley Hospital."

Brooks said he and some friends attended a Dolphins game, the first with the new coach (Dan Campbell), and brainstormed to come up with a better name for the 73-acre development.

"Why not have the biggest flagpole in the state of Florida?" he suggested. "The biggest one now is 170 feet tall and was built in 2008 at Uptown Station in Fort Walton Beach and it's been a huge success."

Instead of Water Tower Commons it could be called Old Glory Square, Brooks said.

"I wanted to float that idea out there," Brooks said. "The council and mayor could inspire the developer like the coach inspired the Dolphins."

Council members made no comment about the proposal, waiting for the site plan presentation from the developer, Southeast Legacy Investments. That could be as soon as Nov 9. The town is awaiting a letter from the county accepting the traffic study.

The A.G. Holley tuberculosis hospital, owned by the state, closed in 2012. Southeast Legacy and Wexford Capital purchased the land from the state a year ago.

FAU study: Moisture, not sand temperature, may determine loggerhead gender

By Cheryl Blackerby

Scientists have long thought sand temperatures surrounding turtle nests determined the gender of sea turtles. Because sea turtles don't have an X or Y chromosome, their sex is defined during development by the incubation environment.

The prevailing theory was "hot chicks, cool dudes" — at sand temperatures above 84 degrees clutches of hatchlings would be predominantly females, below that temperature, hatchlings tended to be males. At 84 degrees there is about 1-1 sex ratio.

But a recently published four-year study of loggerhead hatchlings by FAU biologists disputes this theory and has scientists stunned.

understanding (of sand temperature) came from research done mostly in labs and we had every reason to expect that to be the case in the real world," said Dr. Jeanette Wyneken, FAU biologist who along with Alexandra Lolavar directed the study, which appeared in the journal Endangered Species Research.

But the study showed that probably wasn't the case in nature, she said.

The study was conducted in Boca Raton at Red Reef Park, South Beach Park and a small part of Spanish River Park, where there was still some original sand on the beach. The Green sea turtle nesting sets record

Green sea turtles set an alltime nesting record during the 2015 Florida nesting season, which ended Oct. 31.

The Florida Fish & Wildlife Conservation Commission reported about 28,000 green sea turtle nests counted on 26 index beaches statewide during this year's nesting season.

That's up from the previous record of 25,553 green turtle nests recorded at the index beaches in 2013.

Green sea turtles tend to follow a two-year nesting cycle with wide year-to-year fluctuations.

The record number of nests this year suggests that strong nesting numbers for green turtles in 2013 are part of a trend.

"It looks like years of conservation for this endangered species are paying off," said Simona Ceriani, an FWC research scientist.

— Willie Howard

biologists wanted a baseline that excluded different types of replacement sand.

But if sand temperature does not cause the embryonic sex of turtles, the researchers needed to find out what does. They knew that gender was determined by the environment but was it rainfall, sun, shade,

The need for answers was urgent because FAU biologists had discovered that in some years Florida beaches were producing no male loggerhead hatchlings.

"It's a pretty big deal," Wyneken said.

Florida produces about 85 percent of the loggerhead turtles in the Atlantic north of the equator. About 11 percent of that number comes from Palm Beach County, she said.

The county has historically produced a majority of female turtles, which was considered ideal and good for the recovery of an imperiled species.

"It can be good that most are females, but it's a little alarming when we have years with no males," Wyneken said. "In the last 10 years, there have been three years with no males. We're sampling a fraction of the nests so we may be missing some males, but not many."

Wyneken and her researchers found that the numbers of females and male hatchlings wildly fluctuated, she said. "We had a crazy range of 65 percent females one year, 95 percent the next, and 100 percent the third year. That means that we needed several years of data to start to identify normal sex ratios."

After four years of research, the FAU biologists found that moisture seems to be the key factor in gender determination, not sand temperature alone, she said. And it's not because rainfall lowers sand temperature, as many scientists had assumed.

"We found out that by the time the water percolates down to the nests buried 18 inches down in the sand, it's pretty much the same temperature as the nest," she said. "The rain is not cooling it down unless it's four or five days of hard and steady rain. Those events do cool things down, but only for a

The study has prompted more questions about how the moisture determines gender.

"There are a lot of different hypotheses about how moisture and temperature direct the sex of embryonic turtles to be male or female. Maybe moisture facilitates turning genes on and off. Another is that the sexes might be directed by factors associated with developmental rates. When there's more moisture the rate of incubation may slow down," Wyneken says. "If you have more water in the sand you have less oxygen. If there's less oxygen, development slows down."

FAU biologists including Lolavar, lead author of the study which is the basis of her honors thesis program, will continue to study nest environments.

"The next step is figuring out what the moisture is doing to the rate of development," said Wyneken. "An observation is that nests that produce males tend to incubate longer. But maybe we're missing something. Maybe they're incubating longer for other reasons."

These turtles are already fighting an uphill battle since roughly 1 in 2,500 to 7,000 sea turtles make it to adulthood.

Meanwhile, loggerhead hatchlings didn't fare well this

"There was a record number of nests in the state, but the success of the nests was really poor. We had a super hot June and July on the East Coast, and hot and dry is pretty bad for hatchlings," Wyneken said. *

Municipal candidates must file earlier than usual

By Steven J. Smith

Candidates planning to run for offices in many of the Palm Beach County municipal elections March 15, will need to file qualifying papers earlier than usual, according to Supervisor of Elections Susan Bucher.

"Due to the federal elections next year, we need to mail out military and overseas ballots 45 days before the election," Bucher said. "So our deadline for qualifying candidates will be much earlier this time around."

That deadline traditionally depends on the city, she added, but all municipal town clerks have agreed to change their qualifying dates to fit candidates on the March 15

"That's because by getting on that ballot they won't have to pay a lot of the expenses for their own elections," Bucher

As of this writing, no candidates have officially filed for open seats or offices. Filing periods for the March 15 elections in Palm Beach County coastal towns — as well as available seats or offices and their terms — are as follows:

South Palm Beach: noon, Dec. 1 until noon, Dec. 15; two, two-year terms for council member.

Lantana: noon, Nov. 24 until noon, Dec. 8; two, three-year terms for council member.

Manalapan: noon, Nov.

24 until noon, Dec. 8; three, two-year terms for Town Commission.

Boynton Beach: noon, Nov. 3 until noon, Dec. 17; one, three-year term for mayor and two, three-year terms for City Commission.

Ocean Ridge: noon, Nov. 24 until noon, Dec. 8; one, three-year term for City Commission.

Briny Breezes: noon, Nov. 10 until noon, Nov. 24; one, 1-year term for mayor; one, 1-year term for town clerk; three, two-year terms for alderman.

Highland Beach: noon, Nov. 10 until noon, Nov. 24; one, three-year term for City Commission.

Gulf Stream: No municipal elections will be held in 2016.

The next election will take place in 2017 for five Town Commission seats carrying three-year terms.

Delray Beach: No municipal elections will be held in 2016. The next election will take place in 2017 for two City Commission seats carrying three-year terms.

Boca Raton: No municipal elections will be held in 2016. The next election will take place in 2017 for mayor and two city council members, each having three-year terms.

Bucher said municipal candidates face a variety of requirements to attain eligibility for an election.

"In Delray Beach, for example, you have to get at least 25 registered voters to sign your petition," she said.

"In other territories you can pay a fee and file paperwork. It all depends on the individual municipal charters, which also generally determine when the elections will take place. But state law does allow them to change that, by resolution or ordinance, in the years that they jump on to a federal or state ballot. Joining bigger elections helps them to reduce expenses. We're hopeful it will increase voter turnout as well."

Bucher added early voting will be available for eight days prior to the March 15 elections, at 13 locations around Palm Beach County.

Seasonal foot- and bike-traffic safety push around the corner

By Rich Pollack

With the season just around the corner and more people taking to South Florida's roadways, some law enforcement agencies along Palm Beach County's coast are gearing up educational and enforcement efforts designed to keep pedestrians, bicyclists and motorists safe.

Those using State Road A1A in Highland Beach, Ocean Ridge and surrounding areas can expect in coming weeks to see an increased police emphasis on ensuring that motorists, bicyclists and pedestrians know applicable laws and follow them.

"We're trying to do what we can to ensure that everyone shares the road safely and in accordance with the law," says Highland Beach Police Lt. Eric Lundberg.

Highland Beach's police officers have stepped up their monitoring of bicycle clubs that ride through town on Tuesday and Thursday evenings and on weekend mornings and are also making a point to educate residents and visitors about the importance of pedestrian safety.

"We're trying to make sure they're crossing the road safely," Lundberg said, adding that there have been instances where pedestrians have stepped into traffic — in crosswalks and outside of crosswalks — expecting cars

Lundberg said that while pedestrians have the right of way in a crosswalk, it's essential for them to make sure that the driver of the approaching vehicle sees them and plans to stop.

"You can be right, but you can also be dead right," he Highland Beach police have been teaming up with Florida Highway Patrol troopers on a quarterly basis for stepped-up enforcement efforts. During a weekend in late September, nine troopers, including several on motorcycles, were out in force on State Road A1A, issuing warnings and tickets, with an emphasis on bicycle and pedestrian safety.

Over that weekend, troopers issued 25 written warnings, six tickets and five verbal warnings. Seventeen of the 25 written warnings were issued to bicyclists.

In Ocean Ridge, Police Chief Hal Hutchins says his department plans to increase its bicycle, pedestrian and motorist education and enforcement efforts during the season thanks in part to state funds likely to be made available through a grant.

Hutchins said the department has received tentative approval of a grant request that would make it possible for the department to have an enhanced presence during certain hours, with officers specifically assigned to ensure roadways are being safely shared.

"We're going to start out with warnings and with handing out educational materials and then we'll progress to enforcement," he said. "If we see voluntary compliance and understanding of the law, we may never have to get to the enforcement stage and I think that should be our goal."

The efforts of law enforcement to educate those sharing roads such as State Road A1A are being endorsed by Human Powered Delray, which advocates making roadways safer.

"We strongly support what police are doing to educate bicyclists, pedestrians and motorists about the need to respect each other's rights," said the nonprofit organization's President Jim Chard. "What a police presence does is provide awareness."

Chard said he often talks to guests at Delray Beach's GreenMarket in the Park who say they don't ride their bicycles as much as they'd

"I hear people say 'it's just not safe here," he said. "We're working hard to change that."

Chard said his organization is working on several initiatives to improve safety, including advocating for more bike lanes and conducting safety seminars.

"What police are doing is positive and we support it," Chard said. "But it's not nearly enough."

Police departments in both Ocean Ridge and Highland Beach are members of the South Florida Safe Roads Task Force, as are most other police departments serving residents in the coastal communities.

In 2014, the task force organized two major saturation efforts along State Road A1A — one in September and one in April — focused on bicycle, pedestrian and motorist safety.

Lundberg, who helped organize the task force, says the group is in the process of planning education and enforcement efforts for 2016 that could include more saturation enforcement.

"Our goal is to restore compliance with Florida laws and protect everyone on the road," he said. *

She's 105 and her agenda includes Skyping and Harley cruising

By Ron Hayes

When Freida Boyers was a little girl growing up in Wauseon, Ohio, two neighbor boys had a motorcycle.

"Floyd and Bill Smith," she remembers. "I always wanted to go for a ride on it, but they wouldn't take me, and back in those days a girl didn't ask."

She was 13 then.

On Oct. 27, a kinder neighbor gave Freida Boyers a ride on his motorcycle to celebrate her

She was 105.

It was not her first ride. When she turned 100 in 2010, her grandson, Matt Boyers, took her for a spin on his cycle. That adventure was captured in a framed photo, and when Phil Lambrecht, a neighbor in the Wellington Arms condominium, spotted it, he said, "Want to go for another ride on my bike?"

And so, on her 105th birthday, Boyers donned a crash helmet, surrendered her walker and was helped aboard a black, 1997 Harley-Davidson Electra

At 2 p.m. sharp, with Ocean Ridge police officer Bobby Massimino providing an escort, Lambrecht revved the engine, pulled onto North Ocean Boulevard and headed north with his 105-year-old passenger holding on.

"How fast are we going?" she called to Lambrecht.

"About 22 miles per hour," he

"That's fast enough," she told

Lambrecht ventured as far as the Boynton Inlet and then circled back in the park. As they neared the Arms, Massimino turned on his flashers and hit the siren a couple of times.

The cycle came to a stop and Boyers retrieved her walker.

"It was beautiful!" she reported. "It looked to me like we were really flying by!"

Born Oct. 27, 1910, in Wauseon, she remembers when a cousin was given one of those newfangled radios, sometime in the 1920s. You had to use earphones, so only one person at a time could listen.

Today, she Skypes with her seven great-great-grandchildren.

She has eight great-grandchildren, five grandchildren and countless razor-sharp memories. She remembers the 1920 presidential election, when Warren G. Harding beat James M. Cox, and she can still recite

"Mom was a Democrat and Dad was a Republican," she remembers, "and every election day Mom would say, 'Goodbye, I'm going to go and cancel out your Dad's vote."

Harding's campaign song.

She remembers driving a horse and buggy by herself from Pioneer, Ohio, to Harrison Lake with her 5-year-old cousin at her

In 1929, she married Leo Boyers, and they ran a construction company together, building schools and churches around Wauseon. They had two children, Jerry and Barbara. Leo died in 1983 after 54 years with her. She left their condo along Lake Osborne in Lake Worth in 2005 and moved to Ocean Ridge with her granddaughter, Nadine Magee, and her husband, Jay.

'I can't believe I've lived as long as I did," she marvels. "I feel about ... oh, 65."

Ask her the secret of her long life and she ponders the question.

"Well, there's this — we were never drinkers or smokers or went out partying. We were more small town. It was the Depression and nobody had any money."

Yes, she's heard about that new study that claims bacon and hot dogs increase the cancer

"I think it's crazy," she says. "I ate anything I wanted, and I still do. Up to a point. I baked an apple pie yesterday."

And what has she learned in

"If you listen to the TV, everybody is so hateful to everybody," she says. "But we went out for a birthday dinner the other night, and the waiters sang 'Happy Birthday' to me, and people from the other table came and spoke to me. There's some lovely people in the world, but these politicians ought to be ashamed of the way they're talking about each other."

She attributes much of life's happiness to her faith.

"I've been a Christian all my life," she says. "Without my church, I don't know what I'd do."

But she's no prude. Two years ago, for her 103rd birthday, Freida Boyers decided she wanted to experience a little gambling.

The Magees took her to a casino, where she worked the slots — and won.

And before that there was the motorcycle ride for her 100th birthday. That one lasted a good deal longer than last month's little trip to the Boynton Inlet and back.

"Oh, we went all around our little town up in Ohio that time," she said. "But I was younger then."

Lake Worth

City rejects partnership with Delray Beach firm

A public-private partnership at the Lake Worth Casino complex, proposed by one of the owners of the historic Sundy House in Delray Beach, has been rejected by the City Commission.

"We are not going to accept any more proposals until we can identify what the financial, operational and physical issues are" at the casino complex, Commissioner Scott Maxwell proposed on Oct. 20. The other four commissioners agreed.

Steven Michael, principal of Delray Beach-based Hudson Holdings, said he wanted the city to act on the latest offer. His company is still moving forward with renovation plans for the historic Gulfstream Hotel in Lake Worth.

The city's Historic Resources Preservation Board will hear a rezoning request Nov. 18 to tie together the parcels that contain the Gulfstream Hotel and another proposed hotel. The proposal would then go before the City Commission in December for a first reading and then in January for a second reading.

Michael hopes the city will ask soon for proposals for the casino complex.

South Palm Beach

Future uncertain for Oceanfront Inn property

By Dan Moffett

Developer Gary Cohen has all the permits in place to tear down the Oceanfront Inn in South Palm Beach, but afterward the fate of the prime piece of property remains anything but certain.

Cohen began a limited demolition of the hotel in October and plans to start reconstructing the sea wall soon. But Mayor Bonnie Fischer says the town knows little more than that.

'We don't have a timetable for when it will be torn down," she said. "But he (Cohen) has all the permits he needs to do it. He doesn't talk to us about his

Since the spring, Cohen's Paragon Acquisition Group has been advertising the property with HFF commercial real estate brokers in Miami. The ad calls it "the last remaining ocean development opportunity on the island" and makes the point that the town has approved his development plan to build a 33-unit condominium building with six stories over a parking garage.

"I've thought from the start that they were going to flip the property," said Vice Mayor Joseph Flagello. "If that's what they want to do, then good, flip Councilman Woodrow Gorbach, a real estate agent, said residents had figured out some time ago that Cohen was probably a dealer and not a builder. He bought the hotel, known to locals as the Hawaiian, for $8.25 million in 2013.

"Rumors have been floating around the town that the owners have no intention of putting a building there," Gorbach said, and wondered about what price the market would allow.

The developer has begun a limited demolition of the Oceanfront Inn in South Palm Beach. Willie Howard/The Coastal Star

"I don't think he's going to get $20 million for it," Gorbach said. "But I'd hate to think he won't get $10 million for it. However, the economy just isn't that good right now."

A potential buyer who wanted to change Paragon's building plan would have to get the town to approve the changes first, officials said. Fischer said getting the demolition completed is the priority for residents right now.

"Having an empty lot is better than what we have now," the mayor said. "We'll see what happens then."

South Palm names Vitas new town manager

By Dan Moffett

Bob Vitas was the first candidate South Palm Beach council members interviewed in October for their vacant town manager's job, and he wasted no time convincing them he was right choice.

"He came in and knocked our socks off right from the what he wanted to do. To me it was obvious he was what we were looking for."

Councilwoman Stella Gaddy Jordan said Vitas impressed her with his experience dealing with beach issues from his time as Key West's city manager.

"The beaches are an extremely important issue for us," Jordan said, "and he has what it takes to lead us through some of the work that we're going to have to do on that."

On Oct. 27, the Town Council gave unanimous approval to the $103,000-a-year contract that makes Vitas the new manager and ends a fivemonth period during which the town has struggled to carry on without one. In June, Jim Pascale was forced to resign as town manager after only six months on the job, when disagreements with the council reached a tipping Town Attorney Brad Biggs, who negotiated the contract with Vitas, said it does not include a provision for severance pay if he leaves the position for any reason during the first six months.

"We'll just let bygones be bygones and go our separate ways," said Biggs, who believes Vitas is planning for an extended stay in South Palm Beach. "He sees this as a longterm move -10 to 12 years. Honestly, he's excited to come to this town."

Vitas, 58, was city manager in Key West from 2012 to 2014, until disputes with the city attorney and City Commission over hiring practices and other matters forced him out of office. Fischer dismissed the breakdown as "just politics" and said residents should keep an open mind to help the town move forward.

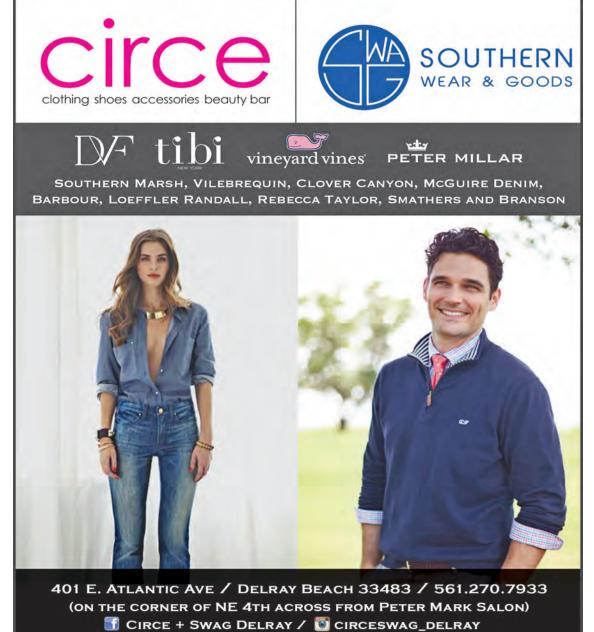

"Let's get to a new era here," she said.

Before serving in Key West, Vitas was the administrator of Lake Zurich, with a population of about 20,000 in northeastern Illinois, from 2007 to 2011. Vitas told council members he believed his role was to be the face of government in South Palm Beach.

"I see myself as a front man, and I understand that it starts with the town manager and his employees and then needs to trickle down," he said of connecting with residents. "Public relations is critical."

Vitas says he wants a "seamless beginning" in the town and will prepare a 90day plan of action for the council to consider. Fischer said she was impressed by Vitas' connections in Tallahassee. He told the council his biannual trips to the capital "were worth their weight in gold" for obtaining funding from the state.

The council interviewed four other candidates: Mark Kutney, former Loxahatchee Groves manager; Sarah Hannah-Spurlock, Key West's assistant city manager; and two former Delray Beach city managers, Louie Chapman and David Harden. 🛪

Bess Hatsis, (I-r) Ellie Ana Sperantsas, Dean Sperantsas and Father Mark Leondis of St. Mark Greek Orthodox Church in Boca Raton pray over the grave of Athena Sperantsas. They released balloons into the sky to honor Athena's birthday. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

Balloons keep family bond alive

By Lucy Lazarony

Nine-year-old Ellie Ana Sperantsas sends messages to heaven.

They arrive via pink balloons with pink ribbons and typewritten notes, the contents of which only Ellie Ana, a fourth-grader at Gulf Stream School, knows.

Ellie Ana's grandmother, Athena Sperantsas, who was an award-winning typist in her day, taught Ellie Ana to type. And typing is a special way for granddaughter and grandmother to communicate.

Why the pink ribbons and the pink balloons?

"Because pink is my favorite color and she liked what I liked," Ellie Ana explains.

Athena Sperantsas died on Jan. 8 at age 87. And because the two shared and celebrated late September birthdays, a balloon launch was planned at Boca Raton Cemetery on Sept. 28.

After a short prayer service led by Father Mark Leondis from St. Mark Greek Orthodox Church in Boca Raton, it is time for the balloon launch.

"How much did you love your Yaya?" Ellie Ana's father, Dean Sperantsas, asks.

"A lot! A lot!" Ellie Ana replies.

"How much did your grandmother love you?" her father asks.

"As much as every drop in the ocean," Ellie Ana answers. With a running and joyful leap, Ellie Ana sends the balloons skyward.

"Dad! It didn't get caught in the tree!" Ellie Ana cries out.

"I see! I see!" her father answers. "You made it work!"

The family then heads to Maggiano's with Anastasia "Bess" Hatsis, her grandmother's best friend, for a birthday celebration.

Ellie Ana's mother, Christy, died when Ellie Ana was just 3 years old and Ellie Ana and her grandmother grew very close.

"There were days she prepared food for her grandmother who was 80 years older than her, and cared for her," Dean Sperantsas says of his daughter.

For the first balloon launch this spring, Ellie Ana typed letters to her mother, grandmother and grandfather, who died when Ellie Ana was 6.

"It was her initiative entirely," Dean Sperantsas remembers. "She typed up letters on an old-fashioned typewriter on her own. She put them in an envelope and sealed them. She attached the letters to each of the balloons and joyously launched them into the heavens."

BOCA RATON — After he retired from his financial consulting firm a couple of years ago, Alan Alford became a city employee once again.

"He went to work as a ranger at Sugar Sands and Patch Reef parks three days a week," recalled Lenore Alford, his wife of 59 years. "He said to me, 'Where else can you be in a beautiful park, riding around in a golf cart?"

For Mr. Alford, who was 84 when he died Oct. 10 at home, being a park ranger was the last in a series of city jobs that began more than 50 years before.

Alan Carlisle Alford was born in Mineola, N.Y., on Aug. 4, 1931, and came to Florida after his honorable discharge from the U.S. Navy.

After graduating from the University of Miami with a degree in business administration, he arrived in Boca Raton in 1958 and became assistant city manager in 1960. Six years later he was promoted to city manager, and when a dispute with the City Council led to his dismissal, he ran for mayor, and won.

After serving as mayor from 1973-74, Mr. Alford opened Alford & Associates, then went on to serve on the City Council for many years.

"He was a very, very smart person who knew what needed to be done," said Al Travasos, a former council member who served with Mr. Alford in the 1980s. "He understood the issues, and politics wasn't a part of his decision-making process. It was, 'What's the best thing to do here?' And he wasn't afraid to speak his mind."

During his time in public life, Mr. Alford was devoted to preserving open spaces for the public's use, focusing on the purchase of coastal property and public parks.

Following his retirement, he and his wife enjoyed traveling the world, including trips to China, Italy, Norway, Greece, England, Spain and Vietnam.

"We had a wonderful life of travel," his wife said. "Our bucket list was to go to the Panama Canal, and last fall we took a cruise there. He was just a very special man."

In addition to his wife, Mr. Alford is survived by two sons, James and Gregg; two daughters, Dawn Zook and Patricia Washam; a sister, Patricia Lockwood; and 11 grandchildren.

A memorial service was held Oct. 16 at St. Paul Lutheran Church in Boca Raton.

The family asks that remembrances be made to Hospice by the Sea (www. hbts.org) or St. Paul Lutheran Church.

Daniel Featherman

HIGHLAND BEACH — Daniel Featherman, a resident of Highland Beach and formerly of Philadelphia, died Oct. 2 in hospice care at Delray Medical Center. He died from complications resulting from surgery.

Mr. Featherman, 83, was secretary and treasurer of Pennsylvania Steel Co., a chain of steel service centers. He was a lifetime partner with his brothers Bernard and Franklyn in their ownerships together of industrial, commercial and retail businesses, as well as real estate holdings.

Mr. Featherman was born in New York and attended Bordentown Military Institute, graduating with honors at 14 years of age, before going on to college. He attended the University of Pennsylvania and moved to Florida to be near his retired parents, graduating with an engineering degree from the University of Miami.

Mr. Featherman was a friendly man who helped many other people to start or to stay in business. He invented several patented steel storage equipment and automotive products.

As a hobby, he enjoyed playing billiards, and became an expert at it, sometimes running over 100 balls in a row against competition. He held active Masonic and Shriners memberships for over 50 years.

In addition to his wife, Carol, to whom he was married for over 54 years, he is survived by sons Barry, a lawyer in Washington, D.C., and Glenn, a dentist, and his wife, Carol, in Arizona; daughter Barbara Hillman, and her husband, Carlton, of Highland Beach; two grandchildren; and brothers Bernard, the mayor of Highland Beach, and Franklyn, who resides in Pennsylvania.

Interment took place at the family mausoleum in Roosevelt Cemetery, near Philadelphia.

Dave Ashe

By Ron Hayes

BOCA RATON — When staff members at the Boca Raton Historical Society wanted reliable information about the city's early days, they called Dave Ashe.

He had lived those early days as a boy, and then, as a man, founded the society to help preserve them.

Mr. Ashe died Oct. 5 at Hospice by the Sea Care Center, leaving behind a city marked by his involvement in countless civic improvements. He was 90.

"I came to work here in 2002, and I've known him ever since," recalled Susan Gillis, the historical society's curator. "He was a wonderful contributor and informant who really saw the changes in the community, for good and bad."

Mr. Ashe was born July 7, 1925, in Oak Hill, Fla., the fourth oldest of two brothers and nine sisters.

In 1930, when he was 5, the family moved to tiny Boca Raton. His father, Haden Ashe, was a bridge tender, first at the twin bridge over the Hillsboro Canal and later the Boca Raton Inlet Bridge, which was renamed the Haden Ashe Bridge in his honor. The family lived on a houseboat by the canal.

After serving in the U.S. Navy during World War II, Mr. Ashe returned home, opened Causeway Lumber, a building supply company, and began a lifetime of community service, both in and out of government.

In 1950, he helped found and sponsor Little League baseball in the city.

When the U.S. government closed its local base, Mr. Ashe and two residents, Aris Smith and Dominic Jalbert, sued to retain 200 acres for what is now the Boca Raton Airport.

In 1960, he persuaded Arthur Vining Davis, owner of the Boca Raton Hotel & Club, to donate 12 acres for what is now the Silver Palm Boat Ramp. In 1970, Mr. Ashe was a founder and first president of the historical society and was instrumental in preserving the old train depot, the Lillian Race Williams home and the old town hall, which now houses the society.

As a City Council member from 1973 to 1975, he and W.M. Cruickshank backed a bond issue to buy beachfront property from J. Myer and the Shine and Fisher families. The issue was approved, and today that land comprises Spanish River Park, Red Reef Park and South Beach Park.

An active member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Elks and Lions clubs, Mr. Ashe raised money to build the YMCA, founded the city's Pioneer Club, and was first chairman of the blue ribbon beautification committee.

"What a gentleman he was!" said Al Travasos, who came to the City Council after Mr. Ashe's tenure. "A really kind guy. He was a person who didn't care if he had his picture in the paper or was social. He just had a vision for the city, and he initiated everything when Boca Raton was just beginning."

Mr. Ashe is survived by his daughter, Sharon Springman, of Jupiter; a son, Joe Ashe, of Boca Raton; their mother, Betty Jo Whiddon; and three grandchildren.

A graveside service was held Oct. 9 at Boca Raton Cemetery.

Ellie's hopes to keep on rocking another 25 years

By Scott Simmons

You'd think Ellie Smela would be exhausted after 25 years of rocking around the clock at her '50s diner in Delray Beach, but she and husband, Bob, show no sign of slowing down.

And why should they?

As Ellie's 50's Diner celebrates its first quarter-century, the place is packed with patrons who are only too happy to savor a bit of their youth — even if they were born long after the decade ended.

You can sense the feeling as you stroll past the pink 1957 Chevy that's parked outside.

"It's the happy feeling you get when you walk in the door," Ellie Smela said.

She and Bob were headed to New England as she spoke. They were looking forward to seeing the leaves change.

But the reds, golds and oranges of autumn are not her first love.

"Pink is my favorite color," she said. It shows in the diner, with its rosy theme, that pink Chevy and the shelltinged Volkswagen Beetle that ferries Ellie Smela around town.

Inside, Ellie's boasts retro booths and chairs. Strips of pink and turquoise neon lights wrap the walls. Black and white tiles cover the floor like a giant checkerboard.

Walk in the door and you feel like a kid again.

The '50s diner was not their first foray into food.

Bob and Ellie Smela are celebrating 25 years at Ellie's 50's Diner on North Federal Highway in Delray Beach. Tim Stepien/The Coastal Star

There, they had a booming takeout business selling sandwiches and salads. Business was good enough they added three lunch trucks to sell meals at car dealerships, construction sites and warehouses across the city.

After eight years, the Smelas expanded into their current space on North Federal Highway, creating Ellie's 50's Diner.

They later bought the building next door, demolished it and expanded the parking lot.

In 1997, they bought land behind the restaurant and added a room to accommodate 40 additional people. The restaurant now seats 140. Later still, they added a banquet room that can accommodate 180 people for gatherings of all sorts.

"We do a beautiful New Year's party," Ellie Smela said. "And we're busy with weddings. We even do '50s-themed weddings once in a while."

Ellie's has moved beyond the basics of the deli to offer breakfast, lunch and dinner.

The most popular dish? The turkey dinner.

"It's fresh off the bone, with Yukon Gold mashed potatoes," Smela said.

It's comfort food, just like the meatloaf, also served with those Yukon Gold potatoes.

"The patty melt also is a favorite. We grind our beef fresh every day," she said.

It's comfort food, or at least fare with a heart.

"Ellie's has always been about family. We get all choked up thinking about the number of people, both guests and team members, the restaurant has touched over the years," Ellie Smela wrote in an essay about the restaurant. "Bob and I are so thankful for our loyal guests and continued support from the community." That's something that never grows old.

Ellie's 50's Diner is at 2410 N. Federal Highway, Delray Beach; 276-1570 or www. elliescatering.com. It's open 8 a.m.-9 p.m. Sunday-Thursday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Artistic legacy

Boca exhibit helps guild mark 65th year of creating art

By Lucy Lazarony

Back in 1950, a group of socially active women in Boca Raton formed a civic club with the aim of building their small city a library. They held an arts and crafts fair in the city's original town hall, and when more than 1,000 people showed up, the Artists' Guild was born.

"I always underscore that this is a museum founded by artists," says Irvin Lippman, executive director of the Boca Raton Museum of Art. "It makes it very distinctive. When you're founded by artists, it really underscores the importance of working artists."

The Boca Raton Museum of Art is celebrating the Artists' Guild 65th anniversary with an exhibition at the museum's Wolgin Gallery through Dec. 13.

The juried exhibition of art by guild members kicked off on Oct. 29 with a backyard bash featuring food trucks, craft wine and beer, live rock and surf music and a birthday cake.

"It celebrates the creativity we know is here in South Florida, particularly in Boca Raton," Lippman says of the exhibition and birthday bash.

And it was the creativity, passion and dedication of Guild artists all those years ago that led to the creation of the Boca Raton Museum of Art and The Art School.

After 1950, Artists' Guild exhibits were held at the Boca Raton Hotel & Club. And in the early 1960s, land lots were purchased and one was donated in Boca Raton's Old Floresta neighborhood. This campus-style facility was completed in 1962, and became the site of the Boca Raton Museum of Art in 1983, with

007 to headline Black & White Gala

By Amy Woods

"Well, hardest substance found in nature, they cut glass, suggest marriage, I suppose it replaced the dog as the girl's best friend."

So said Sean Connery's James Bond in the movie *Diamonds*Are Forever, the theme of the Community Caring Center of Greater Boynton Beach's Black & White Gala. The line, along with others made famous by Ian Fleming's spy novels — "Bond, James Bond" and "shaken, not stirred" — will set the tone for the Nov. 12 fundraiser featuring a dapper Bond impersonator, sexy Bond girls and a sleek BMW Z4 from Braman Motorcars.

007. Guests attending the affair will have the opportunity to pose for photos with the cast of well-dressed characters and participate in a raffle, bid in the silent auction and enjoy a special presentation by Fred Astaire dance studio.

Around Town

h, what a lovely life. In 1962, David Short, the oldest of five children, died in a car crash and his mother, Olive, was diagnosed with cancer. Doctors gave her three months.

But I have one last child to raise, she responded defiantly. Five years later — her fifth child, Martin, on the verge of manhood at 17 and her job done — she succumbed.

"It's a big difference between losing your mother at 12 and at 17," actor, singer, writer and producer Martin Short told more than 1,500 guests at the Boca Raton Regional Hospital's 12th annual Go Pink luncheon, Oct. 21 at the Boca Raton Resort & Club. "I realized I had been an extraordinary beneficiary of willpower."

Before Martin hit 20, his father died from a stroke. Undaunted, he pressed ahead, always looking on the bright side of life.

With a degree in social work in his pocket and stars in his eyes, he auditioned for the Toronto production of Godspell. The cast included his college classmate Dave Thomas, Paul Shaffer, Victor Garber, Eugene Levy and Gilda Radner. Short and Radner made a fine couple for a couple of years until his attention was commanded by "the most beautiful thing you've ever seen in your life," Nancy Dolman, Radner's understudy.

They married in 1980. TV, movies, Broadway, an Emmy, a Tony — he was a star. She landed a role in Soap, but retired from show biz to stay home with three kids. It seemed an idyllic life. Then in 1997, Nancy was diagnosed with breast cancer. She underwent a double mastectomy and the Shorts moved on with their lives only to hit another roadblock a decade later.

Ovarian cancer had claimed Gilda in 1989; in 2007 it struck Nancy. Three years later, she was gone. The National Enquirer broke the story before he could tell his family.

Of writers and analysts who suggest that he turned to comedy to relieve his pain, Short scoffs, "Great stuff, it writes itself — but it wasn't me. My childhood was a blast. It was unequivocally happy. There were difficult times, but they yielded important lessons. They gave me information about life that few guys my age had, as well as a certain fearlessness that would deeply influence my

"When I look back at my life, I can see moments where it might have been understandable that I might have turned to drugs ... or ice cream, but I succumbed, no matter what the situation might have been, to my natural tendency to be happy. Tom Hanks likes to say that of all the people he knows in comedy, I'm

"But my upbeat nature is also a function of resilience, a firm belief that tough experiences Teflon coat you and strengthen you against further adversity. Along the way, I picked up the wisdom that bad things happen and yet the sun still comes up the next day and it's up to you to keep living your life and keeping your setbacks in perspective. You also have to understand that on some level these horrible, sad things happen to everyone. But the mark of the man or the woman is not just how they survive but also what wisdom is gained from the experience."

One of every three women and one of two men will confront cancer and everyone is affected by it in some way. But, everyone responds differently, observed Short. Every decision a person makes is the right decision, because everyone instinctively knows what he or she needs.

Despite the subject, Short's address was hardly a downer, laced as it was with the occasional dig — for laughs — as when he asked the audience:

"Are you all wearing Spanx? You look so-o-o-o good."

Or "I have three children . . . one of each."

And "I'm Canadian. We're the aliens Donald Trump doesn't want to deport." He later described Trump as "the man who screams out his own name when having sex."

Advice: "Never carpool with Suge Knight."

Celebrity intellect: "Kim Kardashian thinks soy milk is Spanish for 'I am milk."

And drawing most raucous applause of the day: "Never ask Bill Cosby to mix your wife a drink! It just makes sense, everyone."

"It's amazing," Short observed, "how cancer alters one's glibness."

Let's see. You've got your Alpine marmot, the foreststeppe marmot, Menzbier's marmot, the Brooks Range marmot and the Himalayan marmot. Colorful varieties include gray, black-capped, yellow-bellied and golden. But no matter how hard you try, you will not find an Okeechobee or Everglades marmot. Not even a Suwanee species

Marmots, which are actually large squirrels, can't take the heat. Most live in colder regions — the Alps, Siberia, Alaska, Canada. Aside from zoos, the closest point of contact for a Floridian would be Punxatawney, Pa. Yes, groundhogs are marmots.

But come Dec. 22, South Florida and Boca Raton, in particular, will be crawling with 'em. In its second year, the Boca Raton Bowl has found a corporate sponsor. The Marmot Boca Raton Bowl, played at sunny Florida Atlantic University Stadium, will be selling outdoor equipment and clothing, much of which is associated with mountain climbing.

Founded in Grand Junction, Colo., in 1974 by a local resident and two California college students, Marmot Mountain was one of the first companies to utilize Gore-Tex fabric. It's big, just not in Florida.

So why sponsor the Boca Raton Bowl?

Simple. Marmot is one of many companies held by Jarden Corp., a Fortune 500 comglomerate that just happens to be based in Boca. Jarden, which started with Mason jars, has acquired such diverse brands as Diamond (matches), United States Playing Cards, Coleman (camping gear), Mr. Coffee and Yankee Candle. Last month it acquired Jostens, the high school memorabilia company. Jarden sells lots of products that football fans buy.

Citing high-quality products geared to a high-adventure lifestyle, bowl game executive director Doug Mosley called Marmot's sponsorship "a great fit with the vibe of Boca Raton and Palm Beach County."

Seeing is believing, especially for the trustees at FAU. A year and a half into

Kelly

John Kelly's tenure as president, reports around campus suggest that the mood of faculty, staff, students and more significantly the board of trustees has never been better. In an annual review by the board, Kelly was rated "excellent" and rewarded with a $40,000 bonus. He took office in March 2014, for a salary reported to be $400,000 plus expenses, car and other perks.

FAU may not be having a great season on the football field, but many of its former athletes are faring well:

Washington Redskins running back Alfred Morris remains among the top rushers in the NFL; Brittany Bowe is preparing to defend her 2015 title as the world's best speed skater.

But universities aren't judged solely by touchdowns or hundredths of seconds. FAU grads have become leaders in business, government and education. Since it opened half a century ago, the school has been an international leader in ocean sciences.

The original University Theatre was revolutionary in design, with dozens of rigid panels that could have be raised and lowered to create mini-scenarios — until the Legislature cut funding for the lifting mechanism. Undeterred, the theater department produced amazing work. A 1971 FAU production of Arthur Kopit's Indians was the only Florida college play selected to compete in the southeastern regional division of the American College Theatre Festival.

After finishing at FAU in 1988, Marc Kudisch headed for Broadway, picked up Tony nominations for Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, Thoroughly Modern Millie and 9 to 5, and featured roles in Sex and the City and more recently House of Cards as Senate Majority Leader Henry Mitchell.

Tyrrell. A

Florida theater circles for three decades, Tyrrell
founded

Theatre Club of the Palm Beaches, which later became Florida Stage, and most recently the drama program at Arts Garage in Delray Beach.

But now as "Dorothy Schmidt Eminent Scholar in the Arts," Tyrrell has a new challenge: Theatre Lab. Its purpose is to develop and produce new work in American theater and provide a training ground for FAU students interested in careers in professional theater and related fields.

"Theatre Lab will establish FAU as a force in the national professional theater movement," Tyrrell said. "With the goal of making great theater accessible, Theatre Lab will bring thousands of community members together with the FAU faculty and student body. A true 'globe theater,' the lab will provide world-class professional theater experiences, but it also will develop project-based partnerships, workshops, conversations with leading playwrights and theater artists while offering enrichment activities at the theater, on campus and throughout the community."

Until a permanent site can be selected, an intimate 150-seat "theater in the raw" will be created on the ground floor of the Parliament Hall residence at the northeast corner of the campus. Beer, wine, drinks and snacks will be available for purchase.

"Lee Roy? It's Carol. Carol Channing. I'm doing a revival of Hello, Dolly! and I want you to play Cornelius Hackl. Jerry Herman and Lucia Victor, the director, don't know you, darling. So, you have to audition, but don't worry, you got the part."

Lee Roy Reams' first encounter with "the" Dolly Levi earned him a Tony nomination, and a long-term relationship as cast member and director that brings him back to The Wick Theatre in Boca for the second time this year.

Last winter he reprised one of his other well-known roles, Albin/Zaza, one of the transvestites in La Cage aux Folles. When the curtain goes up Nov. 5, Reams will take a more unusual turn, not as Hackl or Horace Vandergelder, but as ... Dolly herself.

That's right, for the first time ever, Dolly will not be played by a woman.

Though Reams' performance will be historic because the character and Channing are theatrical icons, it's hardly a new concept. In Elizabethan England, all the roles were played by men.

"I don't do Carol Channing," Reams told South Florida Gay News. "I wouldn't want to do Carol Channing. I want to bring the character to the fore and that's what I will do.

"The point of being an actor is to play roles you can't play in real life. In today's world, sexuality — transgender, bi-, tri, quad-, whatever — it's time people have become more comfortable with it all.

"We're not reinventing the wheel; we're just doing Hello, Dolly!"

Gimme a head with hair . . . It's been 49 years — yes, f-o-r-t-y n-i-n-e — since Hair, The American Tribal Love-Rock Musical, radicalized American musical theater.

The show helped launch such stars as Melba Moore, Ronnie Dyson (who sang Aquarius), Diane Keaton, Ben Vereen, Keith Carradine, Barry McGuire, Ted Lange, Meat Loaf and Heather MacRae. The original production lost out at Tony award time, ironically, to 1776, but the 2009 production claimed a best revival Tony.

The music remains part of the American soundscape. Hair's shock value may have been diminished over the ensuing half century, but as Time magazine noted in 2008, the show "seems, if anything, more daring than ever." Assorted road shows have come through over the years, but a new staging next May by MNM Productions, the South Florida company founded by Marcie Gorman-Althof and Michael Lifshitz, will be the first locally produced version. Auditions, Nov. 16 and 17, could be interesting. A new Keaton? Another Meat Loaf?

To schedule a tryout at Organic Movements Dance Studio in Boca Raton, hopefuls should email Lifshitz at mnmprods@gmail.com and put "Hair Auditions" in the subject line. Candidates should bring a headshot, resume and Equity Card, if applicable, be prepared to move, to perform a one-minute song with sheet music in his or her key (accompanist provided, no recorded accompaniment or a cappella singing permitted) and a one-minute monologue and, especially important, "If you can play acoustic guitar, be prepared to show your stuff."

Asked if the final requisite "to show your stuff," was an allusion to the Hair's legendary "nude scene," Lifshitz played it close to the vest: "Oh my! Did we really say that?"

Bolstered by a successful inaugural season, MusicWorks

Winston

plans to double the fun with four "folkie" shows at the Crest Theatre in Delray Beach. Picking up where John Sebastian and Livingston Taylor left off, pianist George Winston opens the series Nov. 19. He'll be followed by Peter Yarrow Jan. 14, Tom Rush Feb. 10 and Roger McGuinn March 11.

MusicWorks promotes concerts and special events with a philanthropic tilt at not-for-profit venues, several in South Florida. It was the brainchild of Rusty Young, founder and former CEO of the Count Basie Theatre Foundation in Red Bank, N.J., and Lee Babitt, a businessman,

In Lake Worth, the music raising the roof at Bamboo Room is a bit more heavenly this year — at least on Sunday. Common Ground Church, a Southern Baptist affiliate, had been holding services at Common Ground Coffee Bar, just across the street, but worshipers had outgrown the space.

Fortunately for Mike Olive, pastor of Common Ground, he bumped into Bamboo Managing Partner Dave Minton, explained his plight and Minton took it to his partners, who saw the positives and even agreed to reduce the rent. Don't be surprised to hear Will the Circle Be Unbroken with splashes of hallelujah.

All gussied up by a $14 million makeover by decorator Carleton Varney, The Colony Hotel in Palm Beach has launched its winter cabaret season in the Royal Room with Billy Stritch and Jim Caruso, described as Manhattan's most sophisticated musical goofballs, Nov. 6 and 7, followed by perennial favorite Nicole Henry for two weeks. Also on the bill: Tony Danza, Tommy Tune, Aaron Weinstein and Bucky Pizzarelli, The Four Freshmen, Steve Tyrell, Melissa Manchester, John Pizzarelli, The Lettermen and Marilyn Maye.

While not

Keeping details, dates and locations secret is difficult, she told Howard Stern (a sometime Palm Beacher), "because you can't control 350 people."

The 350 will include three families — Manganiello's from Pennsylvania and Vergara's from Colombia, plus her Modern Family. Her TV hubby Ed O'Neill told Entertainment Tonight the entire cast will attend.

Organizing the weekend: L.A. party planner Mindy Weiss. Gown by Lebanese designer Zuhair Murad.

Honeymoon: Not so soon. On Good Morning America, Vergara defined "honeymoon" as "the thing that I'm not going to be able to have much of after my wedding ... because I'm gonna have to go back to work."

The Breakers is a short Uber ride from Delray Beach, but you can bet one occasional resident is not invited to the wedding. Former fiancé Nick Loeb is still pursuing his legal battle with Vergara for custody of frozen embryos the couple created during their relationship.

Chris Christie's Republican presidential campaign and seeking investors for his Onion Crunch. It's billed as "America's first kosher pareve and vegan crunchy onion condiment!"

Loeb reportedly is offering 8,000 shares for a $1,000 investment.

If you've served in a branch of the United States armed forces and have the I.D. to prove it, march over to Boston's on the Beach in Delray on Nov. 11, Veterans Day. From 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., Boston's will serve a complimentary lunch or dinner, up to $20, to any present or former member of the military.

But truth be told, we love the way a poached egg can steal the scene in just about any dish. We've had it memorably over pasta and sandwiches.

It was only natural that poached egg would pop up in a something as decadent as a lobster dish.

West Palm's outdoor spaces to be multimedia 'Canvas'

By Sandra Schulman ArtsPaper Art Writer

Murals and public art are making big waves in Palm Beach County, with paintings stretching up to 10 stories high on buildings in and around West Palm.

Glamorous gallerist Nicole Henry of Nicole Henry Fine Art in West Palm Beach is ready to unveil a big project to bring attention to the enormous possibilities here in town. She has announced an ambitious exhibit that is being billed as the nation's largest outdoor museum show.

Canvas is more of an "art movement," says event founder Henry, whose space on Fern Street has been wowing art connoisseurs and casual viewers alike with her museum-quality photos, sculptures and paintings.

Canvas takes its inspiration from the many murals in the city and from Jeffrey Deitch's Coney Art Walls that took over the revitalized boardwalk in New York's

The unofficial title of "World's Greatest Living Electric Guitarist" automatically eliminates late American contenders such as rocker Jimi Hendrix, blues man Stevie Ray Vaughan, and the inimitable Frank Zappa. So the crown likely boils down to several prominent British veterans who've dipped at least a toe into challenging progressive music.

Among them is the 1960s Yardbirds rock trilogy of Eric Clapton, Jeff Beck and Jimmy Page. Of those, Beck would later venture furthest into instrumental jazz/

Coney Island last summer. This two-week multimedia art experience will run Nov. 8-22 with 20 dramatic, inspiring murals newly painted on selected buildings and infrastructures throughout the downtown district. Add a calendar of receptions on yachts, plus a stylish New York City-style fashion show in the "Graffiti Garden" behind Henry's gallery on Fern Street, and Canvas is expected to draw more than 50,000 visitors over its two-week run.

Murals have been in the news in West Palm lately, as a furor erupted over the rock 'n' roll mural that was painted over on Clematis Street, and as the county's Art in Public Places effort has been changing the rules of the usual game to keep up with the demand for varied, quality public art.

"This is so much more than a 14-day art experience. The idea behind Canvas is to captivate the imagination and ignite both ideas and inspiration by bringing public art to the forefront of our collective consciousness here in West Palm Beach," Henry said. "This amazing city has not yet fully realized its tremendous potential to become an arts and cultural hub. Our Canvas team

English is among the artists who will be taking part in Canvas, a two-week outdoor art project designed to turn West Palm Beach into an outdoor art museum. is very excited to advance that destiny and see the eye-opening effects of our installations."

West Palm is filled with industrial spaces, new high rises, bridges and warehouses — all with blank wall canvases. World-renowned artists planning to participate in Canvas include 2Alas; Bik-Ismo; Cheryl Maeder; David Walker; Eduardo Kobra; Faith47; Jean-Luc Moerman; Jeremy Penn; José Bedia; Kai; Katja Loher; Lonac; Michael Dweck; Registered Artist; ROA; Ron English; Sean Yoro (aka Hula); and Zeus. While the names may not all be familiar, the images are sure to resonate with viewers.

Building-sized murals will be seen on the sides of condominium towers, a hotel, a city-owned garage, and the architecturally unique Royal Park Bridge that leads to Palm Beach.

Additionally, unique sculptures and 3-D installations will be showcased in a warehouse with its own edgy, urban vibe on Fern Street behind the gallery — a space that has been previously considered for a gourmet market.

In total, the Canvas artwork will transform more than 20 locations within the downtown district.

A stylish event that Henry is describing as a fusion of fashion and art called "Your Body is a Canvas" will take place Nov. 20 in the Graffiti Garden. The show will be directed by Kerry Bannigan, co-founder and CEO of New York-based event company, Nolcha Events, and will roll out on an elevated, indoor/outdoor fashion runway.

"Canvas is exactly the kind of event that will help our Arts and Entertainment District truly blossom," West Palm Beach Mayor Jeri Muoio said in a prepared statement. "We're expanding our museums, theaters, galleries, free musical performances, and more because we are a city that wants to showcase its love and support of arts and culture. Canvas is an experience that no one will miss by virtue of the scale and scope. It's fresh, exciting and very much anticipated."

Raphael Clemente, executive director of the West Palm Beach Downtown Development Authority (DDA), says Canvas will deliver huge dividends to all aspects of downtown life, and makes good on the DDA's promise to ensure that the downtown district is "Always Original."

"This event will give our visitors another reason to talk about and return to our shops, restaurants and cultural attractions, while it adds a powerful new dimension to our A&E District. Canvas is going to be a smash hit," Clemente

And then there's 69-year-old Allan Holdsworth.

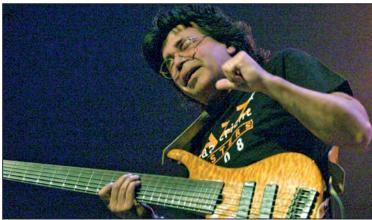

Why would he stand alone? Because he's a nonsinging instrumentalist whose influence is arguably matched among these guitarists only by Hendrix and Clapton, both of whom were rock-and-bluesbased vocalists. The righthanded Holdsworth's left hand is a microcosm of what sets him apart, since it fuels a liquid, two-handed legato attack that's unlike the approach of these other greats, who primarily use their non-picking hands only to dictate the notes on their fret boards.

"The legato element is because I actually wanted to play the saxophone," Holdsworth says by phone from his adopted hometown of San Diego, "but we didn't have enough money to afford one. My father was a fine pianist, and my only real teacher. So when I got a cheap guitar from an uncle, and my dad saw I was still interested in it a few months later, he said he would get me some books and teach me some theory. But I still found myself trying to make the guitar sound more hornlike than what I was used to hearing."

There are ample other elements in Holdsworth's arsenal, all of which will be on display when the guitarist visits Florida — for the first time since the 1980s — to play a mini-tour that includes the black box theater at the Mizner Park Cultural Arts Center in Boca Raton on Nov. 21. He'll play with his touring trio of the past few years, featuring bassist Jimmy Haslip and drummer Virgil Donati.

"There are many unusual aspects to Allan's playing," says the Los Angeles-based Haslip, 63, best-known for a 32-year tenure with fusion icons the Yellowjackets. "From his physical technique to his knowledge of harmony, to how he hears his guitar during chords and soloing, and how he hears the overall music in his head, which includes song structure, phrasing and melodies. And all are connected to his instinctual and creative ideas, and how he personally internalizes everything and expresses his emotions. All extremely unique, and distinctly one of a kind."

Holdsworth's facility on the instrument is revered by notable younger guitarists in a surprisingly wide range of genres, including progressive rocker Alex Lifeson of Rush, fusion icon Scott Henderson, instrumental rocker Joe Satriani, jam band hero Jimmy Herring of Widespread Panic, and a wide swath of traditional jazz players from Stanley Jordan to Kurt Rosenwinkel to Jonathan Kreisberg.

Perhaps that interest stems from the fact that Holdsworth's advanced technique didn't surface via the traditional music school route. Born in Bradford, West Yorkshire, in 1946, he grew up appreciating recordings by guitar torchbearers Django Reinhardt, Charlie Christian and Joe Pass, as well as saxophonist John Coltrane. In addition to his fluid approach a la a sax or piano, Holdsworth also plays the violin.

"A lot of us start out on guitar, but study piano players later on," says Holdsworth. "My father had a huge record collection, and taught me from a piano standpoint, which kind of took me down a different path from the start."

His early exposure with jazz saxophonist Ray Warleigh and drummer John Hiseman's progressive rock band Tempest led to Soft Machine, an avant-garde British group that showcased its guitarist's mercurial abilities, both live and on the 1974 album Bundles. While most of the world hadn't yet taken notice, a significant portion of the most influential musicians certainly had.

The Holdsworth aura expanded exponentially from the mid-'70s through mid-'80s, largely through recording sessions with artists and bands. Ever conscious of artistic control, Holdsworth didn't officially start his solo recording career until 1982 with the independently released album I.O.U. The Van Halen-inspired EP Road Games, produced by longtime Van Halen engineer Ted Templeman, yielded a Grammy nomination for Best Rock Instrumental Performance.

Standout CDs since include the molten Metal Fatigue (1985), Haslip's favorite, Sand, from 1987, on which Holdsworth utilized an additional guitar-synth controller called a SynthAxe; and Secrets (1989), with the one-of-a-kind contributions of former Zappa drummer Vinnie Colaiuta.

A successful PledgeMusic online campaign has fueled Tales From the Vault, a collection of outtakes from Holdsworth's previously recorded sessions that he's putting the finishing touches on. There's also a new studio effort, to be called Insomniac and released through Steve Vai's Favored Nations label.

It'll feature bassists Jimmy Johnson, Anthony Crawford and Haslip, plus the 57-year-old Australia-born Italian Donati on drums on all tracks.

A tune from that release, Cygnus, is in the trio's repertoire for its forthcoming tour, along with older Holdsworth solo faves like Material Real, Letters of Marque, Looking Glass and Water on the Brain Pt. 2.

"I'm obviously not the fastest guy when it comes to making records," Holdsworth says. "All the basic tracks are done for Insomniac, but I have to get my parts down. And I've probably always erased more stuff than I've kept!"

Master Chorale of South Florida (Oct. 25, St. Andrew's School, Boca Raton)

The Master Chorale of South Florida opened its 12th season with the Requiem (K. 626) as well as an excerpt from a large cantata by the 17th-century Danish-German composer Dietrich Buxtehude, bestknown for his organ works and his mentorship of a young Johann Sebastian Bach. The large chorus was accompanied for the Mozart by The Symphonia Boca Raton in its first seasonal outing before its first concert in early December.

Now in the third year of its existence under Brett Karlin, the Chorale sounds strong and accurate, and this large group of professionals and amateurs work well with their young, passionate and energetic director.

The Buxtehude cantata, the "Ad manus" section of his Membra Jesu Nostri (BuxWV 75), was accompanied by a small Baroque ensemble of two violins, cello and organ, which played adeptly.

Soprano Sherezade Panthaki was the chief soprano soloist in the Buxtehude, and had the lion's share of the work in the Mozart.

She sang beautifully in the aria "Salve Jesu, pastor bone" spinning out its melismas with impressive breath control and bringing a clear, forceful voice and presence to her performance.

The Requiem took up the rest of the program, and it received a very fine reading. Karlin led it with obvious reverence and forthright tempos, unleashing plenty of fire in the "Dies irae" and "Rex tremendae," and guiding the singers through very creditable fugue singing. — Greg Stepanich

Norton makes room for van Gogh, Degas

It's about to get crowded at The Norton Museum of Art. The exchange initiative that brought Monet's Nymphéas to its walls last year is back with two French 19th-century masterpieces showing Nov. 5 through April 17.

A reciprocal loan from the Cleveland Museum of Art, Vincent van Gogh's The Poplars at Saint-Rémy (Les peupliers sur la Colline) was painted in 1889 while the Dutch-born artist stayed at an asylum near Saint-Rémy in southern France. This emotional piece contains everything van Gogh is known for: energetic brushstrokes, striking color, thick paint.

Sharing the spotlight is an oil piece painted on mattress ticking. Portrait of Mlle. Hortense Valpinçon (c. 1871) by Edgar Degas depicts the young daughter of his childhood friend, Paul, whom he visited often at a country estate in Normandy. Here, the girl leans casually against a table while holding what is left of her apple. Her white apron stands in contrast with the dark tablecloth and the wall's floral pattern.

Trading places with the van Gogh and the Degas are the Norton's Gardens of Villa Moreno, Bordighera by Claude Monet and Christ in the Garden of Olives by Paul Gauguin.

Delray arts center's new director says community will drive programming

By Steven J. Smith ArtsPaper Writer

Beating out nearly 100 applicants for the job, Rob Steele was recently chosen to take the reins at Old School Square — formerly the Delray Beach Center for the Arts — as its new president and CEO.

Steele, 57, is originally from Flint, Mich. He earned an undergraduate degree in business administration from Adrian College and his master's in business administration from Central Michigan University. In 2005 he took the position of executive director at the Williamsport Community Arts Center in Pennsylvania, where he spent the next 10 years.

During that time he implemented event analysis, fee negotiation practices, marketing strategies and guest service enhancements that effectively doubled ticket sales there in just two years. In addition, Steele initiated a community outreach effort that increased local and regional partners, and devised an endowment campaign in 2010 that generated more than $5 million.

"My mandate from the board of directors in Williamsport was 'to put the community in the Community Arts Center," Steele said. "While I never actually had this mandate tattooed anywhere on my person, I did take the responsibility very seriously indeed.

"During my tenure, we expanded the number of community partners from a dozen or so to nearly 300," he said. "I hope to bring and share a vision for community outreach and engagement with every corner of the community to my position at Old School Square."

Although he has been on the job for only a few short weeks, Steele has hit the ground running. He said his first order of business is to comprehensively understand how the community works how decisions are made, how the municipal government and the arts community work together, what kind of people live in Delray Beach and what they like in terms of arts and entertainment — in order to establish a useful and collaborative presence there.

"Understanding every facet of the community is important in figuring out how we can best serve its needs," he said. "That's what I'm trying to do and I'm trying to do it fast, while I still have fresh eyes and am not pulled into how things were done in the past."

In his first six weeks on the job, Steele says, he had "at least 30 breakfasts and lunches with everybody under the sun" —

'People feel better if they have lots of choices,' says Rob Steele, new CEO at Old School Square. Photo by Steven J. Smith

the mayor, the city manager, the head of the historical museum, the heads of the nearby Arts Garage, Milagro Center and the Spady Cultural Heritage Museum, to name a few.

"I wanted to learn what they're doing and what their challenges are and avail the Old School Square to help the marketing cooperative, the chamber of commerce and everybody we possibly can," he said. "If it's another arts organization, I'll promote a show for them the same night I've got a show, if necessary, because I figure I'm not competing with them. We're all in this together, and what I've learned is Delray Beach is at a point where a lot of things are falling in place."

Many of those things falling into place are doing so at Old School Square, at 51 N. Swinton Ave. in downtown Delray Beach.

Currently celebrating its 25th anniversary season, the center offers what it calls "a total arts experience" through events, theater, exhibits and learning opportunities.

The campus includes the 323-seat Crest Theatre (which recently received approval from the fire marshal for about 36 more), the Cornell Museum of Art and The Fieldhouse (formerly the Vintage Gymnasium).

The Pavilion, which opened in 2002, hosts outdoor concerts and festivals. The School of Creative Arts (located on the second floor of the Crest Theatre) offers art, photography and writing classes and workshops. The center also serves as a venue for community, corporate, private and media events.

"People feel better if they have lots of choices," Steele said. "I am a firm believer in the 'reverse-engineering' technique for choosing programming that will be appropriate to the tastes, calendars, and budgets of the people who live in the community. The trick is to continually ask questions, listen carefully to all of your constituents and keep a vigilant eye on affordable access to the arts."

One refrain Steele often hears is a clamor for family entertainment, and he plans to take that seriously.

"There has to be enough things for families to do," he said. "That's certainly an area we'll concentrate some of our efforts on. Educational programming is also important. I want to start an educational series and bus kids in, because there's really no arts offered in schools anymore. I was alarmed to learn about that. We need to fill that gap."

Funding the arts center's myriad activities and campus improvements is a challenge Steele welcomes and one he feels the Delray Beach community is willing to help shoulder. The Community Redevelopment Agency has earmarked $1.2 million so far, he said, and he is exploring other opportunities such as inducing local corporations to buy naming rights to several of its performance venues.

"We're also looking into doing some fundraising and attaining government grants," he said. "Grants are definitely available for projects like ours."

As for the future, Steele wants to see the arts center return to its "Square roots."

"We are currently plotting a course to become the Old School Square Arts and Entertainment Park," he said. "We envision a cohesive arts and entertainment campus in a park-like setting that is continually abuzz with activities for all ages. We hope to be a highly prized community asset where residents and guests alike can create cherished memories. We would also welcome the opportunity to be a catalyst for economic growth and vitality."

The Wick's cross-dressing 'Dolly!' will be anything but a drag

By Hap Erstein ArtsPaper Theater Writer

Last season, Lee Roy Reams was a sensation at Boca Raton's Wick Theatre, playing drag queen Zaza in La Cage aux Folles. So it was probably inevitable that Marilynn Wick would say to him, "I've got to have you back next year. What do you want to do?"

Reams said, "I want to do Hello, Dolly!," a show he had directed numerous times. Wick replied, "No, I've got to have you in the show." And he said, "Right, I want to play Dolly." And she laughed at the idea

Well, Wick is not laughing anymore. Reams opened this month in Hello, Dolly!, playing matchmaker Dolly Gallagher Levi.

The casting idea came from his co-star, Lewis J. Stadlen (Minnie's Boys, Candide, the national tour of The Producers that played the Kravis Center in 2004.)

"The person who really encouraged me to do this was Lewis," explains Reams. "I was directing Hello, Dolly! at the Muni (Opera House in St. Louis) with Randy Graff and Lewis in the leading roles. And Lewis said to me, 'So when are you going to play the part? And when you do, I'll play Vandergelder," the cantankerous Yonkers merchant whom Dolly sets her marital sights on. Reams simply replied, "I'm going to hold you to it."

Over the years, Reams has discussed his playing the role with composer-lyricist Jerry Herman. "And the thing with Jerry is that he knows I'm a purist," says Reams. "I like the original concept of the show. They know that in my hands it's not going to be a drag show. It's going to be an actor playing the character."

To his knowledge, this is the first time a man has been authorized to play the iconic role in the United States. But, he adds, "English actors do it all the time. And in Shakespeare's day there were no female actors. It's all part of a history, a rich tradition."

True, Reams has played cross-dressers previously, in Victor/Victoria, The Producers and La Cage. But he insists, "It's not that I'm into wearing dresses. I'm really not. ... I'll play anything. I'm an actor, and it's interesting for us to play things we don't normally play."

To get into character, Reams channels a bygone film star. "The person who will influence my performance is Rosalind Russell. She is the image I have in my head, a compilation of everything she did," he says. "She always was a powerful presence, always in control."

As Stadlen says, "When Lee Roy said he was going to do it, I thought, 'Great.' I bought the notion in an abstract way. Then, when I started to rememorize it, I thought, 'Now wait a minute. How am I going to do these scenes with Lee Roy?' After one week of rehearsal, the whole gender thing disappeared. I totally buy that I'm doing all this with a woman."

Asked if he has any other female roles in mind to play, Reams scoffs. "It's not that I have a penchant for playing women's roles. That's not it at all. It's simply a good part," he says. Then he pauses and adds, "When I saw Tyne Daly in Gypsy, I went, 'I could play that part. I could play Rose."

According to Reams, he once called up playwright Arthur Laurents about the role and he agreed to let him play Gypsy Rose Lee's pushy stage mother if Reams could find a theater who would let him do it. (Marilynn Wick, are you listening?)

Composer Herman has long said that he would like Hello, Dolly! to return to Broadway. But no matter how well received the Wick production is, Reams doubts he would ever be allowed to perform the role in New York. "Oh, they would never put me on Broadway in this," he says. "They aren't adventurous enough."

So you might as well see this image-shattering production at the Wick, probably the only place it will ever play. For the most part, it will be a traditional production, Reams assures us.

"You're going to see respect to the original show and what made it successful — a classic presented as a classic," he says.

With a Wink and a Nod: Cartoonists of the Gilded Age (Flagler Museum, through Jan. 3)

A man tells his friend he lost $27 on Wall Street. The friend replies that he read the stock market news in the paper and asks: "Who got it Gould or Sage?"

This was brave humor in 1900.

Jay Gould and Russell Sage were well-known railroad executives at the time. The joke derives from a 1900 cartoon by Louis W. Dalrymple that suggests such powerful financiers controlled everything. It is one of 73 equally bold cartoons comprising a new exhibition at the Flagler Museum.

The exhibition revolves around Puck, a political humor magazine originally conceived in German, with a distinctively sharp voice and a team of progressive artists that went after any target. Its English version, first published in 1877, ran for 40 years and derived special pleasure from focusing on the elite, the spoiled, the corrupt and the unscrupulous. It was the first magazine in America to publish chromolithograph plates on a weekly basis and, might have even been the first to employ, in 1881, what we now call emoticons.

One look at the characters'

outfits and their vocabulary is enough to realize these cartoons are more than a century old. Many seem dated. That they still feel relevant and can make us laugh is a result of the universal themes explored: marriage, immigration, greed, ego, corruption and vanity. Understanding the politics of the time would help us get the jokes, but it is not necessary to appreciate the artistic value of the cartoons, even those in black and white.

With a Wink and a Nod includes brief bios on the talented cartoonists who gave birth to this incendiary brand of humor during one of the most corrupt times in American history. Also included are special issues in striking color and a quick view into the technical aspects of production. — Gretel Sarmiento

Room (opens Nov. 6 in local cinemas)

Adapting Emma Donoghue's 2010 best-seller of the same name, Lenny Abrahamson's Room is, at least at first, a careful study in deprivation, immersing viewers into a four-walled interior so constricting that we become no different than the mouse that shows up 15 minutes into the movie, unaware of what the room is or why it's here.

The room has two occupants: a young woman of maybe 21 (Brie Larson), acne-scarred, pale and perpetually exhausted; and her androgynous son Jack (Jacob Tremblay), a piercing sparkplug of Amazonian hair. Every item in the room is grimy, the paint peeling, the commode missing its top, the kitchen stocked with grilled cheese and cereal and not much else. A skylight provides the only evidence of the outside world, and exercise is achieved by running the few feet from one side of the room to the other. Jack has no toys and a crappy old boxy television; he entertains himself by fingering rug fibers.

A visitor of apparent familiarity (Sean Bridgers) appears regularly to restock the room's squalid provisions, and he sleeps with the mother. Significantly, we first encounter him without his pants, through the slits in a cramped closet nook, where Jack is kept when the man

We don't see people like this in the movies, or even in real life. Most viewers will ask themselves questions during this mysterious overture of restriction, and answer in judgment: What kind of a mother would provide this kind of life for her son?

Abrahamson and screenwriter Donoghue, who adapted her book, reveal the answers, and when they do, all judgment will cease, or turn to shame. It's one of the great revelations in recent cinematic history, in fact, and those interested in experiencing the full power of Room should see the film before reading the rest of this review.

We learn, when Jack does, that his mother is an abductee. She was captured by the male visitor, whom she calls Old Nick, seven years earlier. She birthed and raised Jack in captivity, shielding him from any knowledge of an outside world.

They live in a shed with a bolted door, and only Old Nick knows the code. The story begins on Jack's fifth birthday, a time in which he's finally old enough, his mom says, to know the truth and to attempt a harrowing

Room achieves its dramatic crescendo after only about 45 minutes, and it's a sequence of heart-stopping tension that hugs the border between the agonizing and euphoric. The rest of the film — about half — is calmer, but these scenes, set in comfortable, hushed domesticity, are no less important to the themes that are central to Room's fragile backbone: healing, coping and the eternal connection between mother and child. — Palm Beach ArtsPaper staff

Picnic (Palm Beach Dramaworks, through Nov. 8)

We knew that Palm Beach Dramaworks was drawn to Pulitzer Prize-winning plays, and now it seems it is also attracted to plays about studly strangers who mosey into town and disrupt the status quo. That describes the company's current production, Picnic — a Pulitzer winner from 1953 which has much in common with 110 in the Shade, the musical tale of such a drifter, which the West Palm Beach troupe presented in concert this summer.

Stories of these strangers and the changed lives they leave in their wake are dramatic archetypes that verge on clichés. But playwright William Inge has such evident affection for the residents of the small Kansas town in which he sets Picnic and director William Hayes and his cast bring them to life with such unaffected honesty that we are drawn into their situations even as we recognize how quaint and dated the play now feels.

Labor Day is imminent and with it comes the town's holiday picnic, a predictable event marking the end of the summer. But this year's picnic will be different, due to the arrival of Hal Carter (Merlin Huff), a healthy specimen who gains the attention of all the womenfolk.

Most of them, like neighborly Helen Potts (Elizabeth Dimon), are satisfied just looking, but Madge Owens (Kelly Gibson), a golden-haired beauty stuck in a going-nowhere relationship with safe, but boring Alan Seymour (Taylor Miller), is drawn to Hal like the proverbial moth to a flame.

The Hal-Madge coupling is at the center of Picnic, but Inge paints in many other supporting characters, each in varying degrees yearning for something more than their current circumstance. There is Madge's plain-jane younger sister Millie (Maren Searle), a late bloomer stuck in the shadow of the more attractive Madge, and their single mother, Flo (Patti Gardner), who has her hands full trying to bring up her daughters.

Director Hayes gives each character some attention, but in particular focus thanks to a wistful performance by Margery Lowe is spinster schoolteacher Rosemary Sydney.

She, too, is in an inert relationship with a decent, but emotionally distant man (Michael McKeever), and her expression of unfulfillment is palpable. — Hap Erstein

'Killing Reagan' useful look at history, but marred by focus on trivia

Killing Reagan: The Violent Assault That Changed a Presidency; by Bill O'Reilly and Martin Dugard; Henry Holt, 306 pp., $30

> By Bill Williams ArtsPaper Books Writer

Only months into his first term as president, Ronald Reagan barely survived an assassination attempt as he was leaving a hotel in Washington,

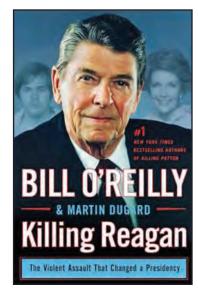

The would-be assassin, John Hinckley, fired six "devastator" bullets designed to explode and spew hot shrapnel on impact. The first bullet hit Press Secretary James Brady in the head, crippling him for life. Other bullets wounded a policeman and a Secret Service

The last bullet pierced the president's lung, stopping an inch from his heart.

Reagan lost half his blood supply. Doctors feared he might not live, but the president pulled through.

In crisp, fast-paced prose, Killing Reagan brings to life the fascinating career, from Hollywood to the White House, of the 40th president of the United States.

The most gripping parts of this book involve Hinckley, who suffered from schizophrenia and was found not guilty of attempted assassination by reason of insanity. To this day he continues to live in a mental hospital in Washington, D.C.

Hinckley became obsessed with the movie Taxi Driver, in which a character plans an assassination to impress his girlfriend. Hinckley fell in love with Jodie Foster, a young actress in the movie, and decided to win her love by assassinating someone. He considered various plots, including an attack on Congress.

Warning signs about Hinckley's mental health were ignored. When he told a psychiatrist in 1981 that he was at the "breaking point," the doctor prescribed "relaxation." He also criticized Hinckley's parents for coddling him and recommended that they kick him out of the house, which they did.

Months earlier Hinckley had been arrested at an airport in Nashville, Tenn., when X-rays detected three handguns in his luggage. A judge fined Hinckley $50 and ordered that the guns not be returned. Hinckley's fascination with guns and his desire to impress the actress deepened.

Killing Reagan is the fifth in a series of "killing" books by these authors. Previous bestsellers chronicled the lives and deaths of Lincoln, Kennedy, Patton and Jesus, which together have sold millions of Fascinating sub-themes in this latest book involve astrology and Nancy Reagan's growing influence on her husband. When Reagan was preparing to take the oath of office as governor of California, Nancy insisted that the ceremony take place at midnight "to reap the full benefit of Jupiter's largesse."

Nancy paid her astrologer $3,000 as a monthly retainer. In perhaps a bit of hyperbole, the authors say the president "goes nowhere and does nothing without approval" from astrologer Joan Quigley.

It is perplexing that the leader of the free world could be guided by the opinions of a stargazer. Perhaps more disturbing is Nancy Reagan's growing influence over decision-making in the White House. Late in his second term, the president delegated many of his day-to-day activities to the first lady.

There was growing recognition that Reagan was suffering from Alzheimer's, which was later confirmed by doctors.

He had trouble recognizing people he had known for years, and after he left office in 1989 he even forgot that he had been president.

His wife, Sarah, headed a national campaign for tighter gun controls (the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence), but Congress largely ignored her overtures.

James Brady died last year and his wife died less than a year later.

O'Reilly and Dugard do not offer an opinion about gun control or even hint at what lessons, if any, the attempted assassination held.

Overall, Killing Reagan offers a useful civics lesson on foreign and domestic issues in the second half of the 20th century, although the authors' focus on trivia can be distracting. Do we need to know that on vacation, the first lady wore "a strapless green-and-black bathing suit with a straw hat"?

In 2001, the Boca Raton Museum of Art opened a new 44,000-square-foot facility in Mizner Park, and The Art School took over the Old Floresta location. Guild members continued to create and display their art in exhibition spaces around Boca Raton.

In 2008, the Artists' Guild moved to 512 E. Atlantic Ave. in downtown Delray Beach (for a better location and traffic) and opened the Artists' Guild Gallery.

"The space is beautiful," says John Frazee, a participating signature member of the Artists' Guild and the gallery's director. "Every time, I finish a painting I take it to the Guild."

The Guild's 287 members create art in oils, pastels, acrylics, mixed media, wood, glass, metal bronze, stone, clay, collage, plus photography and digital imagery.

"Many of the signature artists who have work in this gallery can regularly sell pieces in oil painting, watercolors, lithograph and sculpture," says Mike Gora, president of the Artists' Guild. "And some of the transactions are up to $1,000, $2,000, $3,000, $4,000."

I Hear You, by Lenny Holland, current member of the Artists' Guild.

A photographer who took classes at the museum's Art School before joining the Artists' Guild, Gora says artists in the Guild learn from and support each other.

"All artists want to improve their art and one of the ways to do that is observe other people who share genres of work," Gora says.

Each month, the gallery presents juried shows of original art by signature members of the Artists' Guild. Award winners are announced at opening receptions with live music and food and wine, and the public is welcome.

The first opening of the season was Nov. 5., and an opening and holiday party are planned from 6 to 10 p.m. Dec. 10.

The Artists' Guild holds a sale at the Boca Raton Hotel & Club in the early 1950s.

"The camaraderie is wonderful," says Teresa Frazee, a participating signature member of the Artists' Guild since 2008.

people. It's very rewarding and interesting. Being around creative people is always stimulating."

Juried shows by Artists' Guild members also can be seen at the Living Room Theaters at Florida Atlantic University and at Boca Raton Community High School. *

Soup Kitchen delivery program a prescription for compassion and dignity

By Linda Haase

We're all grateful for our annual Thanksgiving feasts but at The Soup Kitchen in Boynton Beach every single meal is a much-appreciated blessing.

More than 400 hungry people line up at The Soup Kitchen daily. Volunteers dish up meals — and kind words — to those in need. They also give out bags with food and basic necessities.

It's a big help to those who might not otherwise eat. But the staff and volunteers worried about those who aren't able to get to the Boynton Beach Boulevard venue.

Now, thanks to a $100,000 grant from Impact 100 Palm Beach County, the nonprofit organization is bringing food to homebound seniors in Boynton Beach. The free home delivery program offers meals five days a week (weekends are excluded).

Pie It Forward
Sales of pies baked by area chefs help homebound seniors with a week of meals. Page H4

"For over 30 years The Soup Kitchen has been feeding the hungry and consistently evolving to address the many needs of our guests," explains Executive Director Enrique Zuanetto. "Providing home delivery service was a natural offshoot of what we already do in the kitchen."

The organization's Meals on Wheels program was launched in July to help homebound seniors and/or physically challenged residents in the Boynton Beach area

"While we are not affiliated with the Meals on Wheels national program, the Meals on Wheels of The Palm Beaches was instrumental in providing us guidance and support for the launch of our program," says Zuanetto. "The organization was more than generous with their time in helping us minimize obstacles."

A hot meal — along with a hefty snack and a protein shake — is delivered to seniors who are homebound due to medical or health-related mobility issues, transportation limitations or age.

appreciate the grant from Impact 100. It made this program possible," he says. Impact 100 Palm Beach County, a women's charity organization, donated $436,000 to six nonprofit groups in southern Palm Beach County in April. The Soup Kitchen was one of four nonprofits that received $100,000.

"We have heard that many of these people can't afford to buy food or are too tired or weak to prepare it," Taryn Wheat, The Soup Kitchen's grant writer, noted during a speech at the Impact 100 Grants awards ceremony. "We want to ensure that their health does not deteriorate due to lack of nutrition. Equally important is the daily check-in and a human connection. In many instances, this program is a prescription for compassion and dignity."

Sales of pies help feed homebound

By Linda Haase

Eau Palm Beach Resort & Spa's pastry chef Robert Bellini is gathering sumptuous ingredients for a very special pie. Make that 100 special pies.

He and other chefs — including those at Table 26, Boca Grove Golf & Tennis Club, Four Seasons Palm Beach, Mara-Lago Club, Howley's, Whole Foods Market and Testa's — are donating their time and talent to "Palm Beach County's Biggest Thanksgiving Pie Sale" hosted by Meals on Wheels of The Palm Beaches.

The Pie It Forward campaign, which runs through Nov. 14, unites local chefs and philanthropists — including sponsors Bank of America, TBC Corp., Bush Brothers Provision Company and Suffolk Construction — in support of Meals on Wheels' mission to feed homebound seniors.

Apple, pecan and pumpkin pies can be purchased online at www.mowpb.org and picked up at the Palm Beach County Convention Center Nov. 24. Each pie costs $25 and will feed one homebound senior a week of hot, nutritious meals.

"Pie It Forward is built on community spirit. From local businesses to local chefs and our incredible pie selling teams, it has been so exciting watching the community come together for the common goal of supporting Meals on Wheels of The Palm Beaches," says Maura Nelson, Pie It Forward campaign director.

Every bite will help. Meals on Wheels of The Palm Beaches, which expects to deliver at least 25,000 meals to seniors who are homebound in areas including West Palm Beach, North Palm Beach and eastern Lake Worth this year, doesn't receive any government funding and relies on grants and donations.

Paws Up for Pets

Orphaned pups furnished with dozens of caregivers

cts of kindness come in many forms. Some Lare planned. Others are spontaneous gestures. All Neema Jensen and her husband, Nick Woolridge, know is that they needed help — and quickly — and are grateful beyond words by the Let's back up to Sept. 9. Their sweet-tempered, bluenosed pit bull named Asia gave birth to seven puppies inside their Delray Beach home. The delivery went smoothly, but Asia became very ill that night. They rushed her to the emergency veterinary clinic, where she was diagnosed with an infection. Three days later, Asia died, leaving Jensen and Woolridge suddenly in charge of feeding and nurturing seven 4-day-old puppies whose eyes had yet to open.

Sporting red, puffy eyes from grieving the loss of Asia and looking completely exhausted from bottle-feeding the puppies every three hours, the couple showed up at Sklar Furnishings in Boca Raton on the following Monday. Woolridge is an installer and runs the warehouse while Jensen works in the office at this furniture and interior design store.

This store has been owned and operated for the past 13 years by Pat Howard and her husband, Rick. They have always welcomed wellmannered leashed dogs into their 23,000-square-foot showroom. This avid petloving couple has recognized the importance of selecting furnishings for the entire family, including pets.

But on that Monday morning, Howard took one look at the visibly heartbroken couple and asked what was wrong.

Upon hearing the answer, Howard recalls, "I said, 'Bring the puppies here. We will help you.' He immediately left and brought back a basket full of adorable puppies. Our staff fed them every four hours for the next five weeks. It was wonderful to see each of these little puppies grow into healthy, happy puppies who enjoyed running around in the back in our warehouse."

The entire 38-member staff happily pitched in to volunteer for puppy duty, including Erica Dewolf, the store's receptionist.

"We all loved caring for these puppies," says Dewolf. "When they arrived, they were so tiny and so adorable. Their eyes had not even opened yet. Which puppy did I like best? I can't tell you because I loved them all."

Whelping boxes were made from large empty furniture cardboard boxes and filled with comfortable bedding. Staffers not only donated their time, but some also donated puppy pee pads, puppy bottle formula and other accessories to offset the puppy care expenses for Jensen and Woolridge.

Wonder what it is like to step into an unexpected role of being a puppy's surrogate "mom" or "dad"? You can catch a short video depicting some Sklar staffers bottlefeeding the sensational seven young pups in the warehouse by visiting: http://buff. ly/10UTJNU.

Later this month, many of us will be enjoying a Thanksgiving feast and hopefully, many of us will take a moment to give thanks. When I heard about these warehouse pups, I knew I had to share this tale of thanksgiving with all of you.

Every day in so many ways, our dogs, cats and other companion animals show their gratitude to us. They depend on us to feed them, make them feel safe and engage them in purposeful play. But they give back to us with their loyalty, their unbridled joy and their goofiness that makes us genuinely laugh. Sometimes even out loud.

For Jensen and Woolridge, the past weeks have put the capital T in Thanksgiving. Thanks to their coworkers, their seven orphaned pups are in the process of being placed in loving homes.

"Thanks to everyone at Sklar, every one of our puppies survived after Asia died and every one of them is healthy," says Jensen. "I thank everyone on the staff and owners, Pat and Rick, for giving us the opportunity to care for our puppies at Sklar Furnishings. It has been a true act of kindness that Nick and I appreciate very much."

This Thanksgiving, I am giving thanks for my pair of senior dogs, Chipper and Cleo, and my young, adventurous orange tabby named Casey. Each day we get to spend together is a blessing. Chipper and Cleo still display puppylike energy each time I invite them for a walk and Casey is always amazing me with his knack for learning dog-like tricks, like walking on a leash, sitting on cue and giving me a high paw.

Now, it's your turn. Please share with our readers why you are grateful and thankful for that special pet in your life. Just email me at Arden@ fourleggedlife.com.

Happy Thanksgiving!

Boca Garden Club fundraiser a good time to visit this lush space

n three city lots owned by the Boca Raton Garden Club, butterflies drift from bloom to bloom pausing only for a sip of nectar. Showy yellow and white roses as well as pastel pink ones compete for attention. And the street noise is a mere background to the singing and chirping of birds perched in the old oaks and royal poincianas.

This garden is a labor of love for about a dozen Dirt Gardeners, members of the BRGC who cultivate and maintain it. "You'll quickly realize that this is a haven for those who visit and those who work in it," says landscape chairwoman Carol Rice.

Although the garden is on private land, the public will have an opportunity to visit when BRGC hosts its Holiday House fundraiser this month.

Handmade wreaths, ornaments, centerpieces, Christmas trees, angels, swags and more fashioned from nature's bounty — including palm fronds, seed pods, pine cones and shells — will be for sale. In the garden, you'll discover the Dirt Gardeners selling what they have propagated from cuttings and seeds.

"We will have hundreds of plants available," Rice says, pointing to pots lined up around the garden just waiting.

While you are here, take time from the holiday activity to enjoy the garden itself.

Start in the parking lot near where a succulent garden features cactus and variegated agave as well as the sword-like leaves of the Spanish bayonet. Nearby a bromeliad garden is shaded by two black olive trees and the official tree of Boca Raton, the Hong Kong orchid.

Here, as throughout the garden, you'll notice statuary and a variety of containers repurposed as garden frippery. "I think it's these touches that add charm to our garden," Rice says.

For example, the cement tier of a defunct fountain is now filled with pink and red crown-of-thorns and variegated bromeliads. A cherub holding a shell stands on the rim of a birdbath. And a well-used wheelbarrow is a fertile place to grow flowers.

Many of these decorative pieces have been scavenged or donated to the club. "People just leave us things. When we come here in the morning we never know what we will find," says Rice, who has personally rescued pottery and garden statuary from refuse piles in her neighborhood.

In the garden behind the clubhouse, Rice points to the prolific carambola tree covered with what look like orange Japanese lanterns but are actually ripening star fruit. "You'd pay $2 apiece for those in the store," she says.

Elsewhere in the garden you may have a chance to bite into the brown fruit of a sapodilla tree that, if ripe, may remind you of a juicy pear. If not, its tannin will make you pucker.

Around the perimeter of the property is a pink garden featuring plenty of bougainvillea growing under a powder puff tree. And there's a yellow garden tucked under a gumbo limbo. Adding to the color scheme is the yellow-green foliage of sweet potato vines as well as the bright yellow blooms of thryallis and hibiscus.

Nearby is the Japanese garden that is the work of an Eagle Scout. Paebbles cover the ground instead of the pine-bark mulch used elsewhere. The area is graced with towering bluegreen bamboo, white crinum lilies with variegated leaves and a jade plant in a pot resembling a bonsai tree.

With the help of another Eagle Scout who laid paths and built a trellis, a butterfly garden thrives. You enter it under an archway covered with red and purple bleeding hearts to find such plants as fragrant sweet almond, coreopsis with its bright orange flowers, gently blue plumbago, red salvias and fuzzy red chenille plants.

As we speak, the butterflies are busy and we pause to admire them. "This is a quiet, peaceful and entirely therapeutic place that offers the solitude we all enjoy and need," Rice says.

Finding Faith

It's a jubilee, times three, for St. Vincent Ferrer arishioners are gearing up for the triple jubilee in 2016 when St. Vincent Ferrer Catholic Parish will celebrate its 75th anniversary. It's considered a triple because the parish is also commemorating the 50th anniversary of the popular Parish Festival in March, and this comes on the heels of the 60th anniversary of St. Vincent Ferrer School, which the church celebrated Oct. 11 with an anniversary Mass led by Bishop Gerald Barbarito, the bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Palm Beach.

"He is such a humble, gentle man," Julie Ott, the director of stewardship and development at St. Vincent, said. "It's an honor and a privilege to have him grant our request."

Barbarito, who survived brain surgery to remove a benign tumor in February, oversees five counties and 267,000 Catholics. More than 1,000 came to hear the bishop speak.

During the Mass, Barbarito gave his blessing for St. Vincent to conduct a capital campaign to raise $6.5 million for three projects: the construction of an addition to the school; the renovation to the existing 60-year-old school building; and the expansion of the entrances to the church, Ott said. A reception followed, which served as the official kickoff of the campaign.

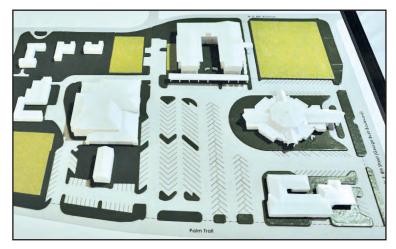

Before the Mass, the school hosted a reunion of sorts. Alumni and current students and their families were invited on a one-mile walk led by Frank McKinney. The local real estate developer led 150 participants along the path he followed every day when he walked his daughter Laura to school, retracing a route taken nearly 1,800 times.

Ott says the church is anticipating record turnouts for the programming centered around the jubilee. Next up is the Diamond Jubilee Gala on Jan. 24 at the Delray Beach Marriott.

"We're very excited to have Matthew Kelly coming to speak," Ott said. "He's known worldwide as the 'Dynamic Catholic.' This program is more than just a speech; it's a four-hour conference on how to live every day with purpose."

Kelly is the CEO and president of DynamicCatholic.

com, a group that is working to rejuvenate interest in the Catholic Church. He'll speak Feb. 27.

The 50th Parish Festival on March 4-6 is going to be bigger and better, with carnival rides, games, live entertainment, food and a monster flea market.

Ott is collecting memorable photos and stories from the early years of the church to use in scrapbooks and journals. Photos will be returned, Ott said. In addition, The Coastal Star will publish a special section on the school in 2016.

Holly House ladies in full swing for show

Drop by Holly House on the campus of First Presbyterian Church of Delray Beach on Tuesday and Thursday mornings, and you'll find more than two dozen skillful stitchers, clever crafters and fantastic florists hard at work, according to Linda Prior, a longtime Holly House volunteer.

Since March, the Holly

House ladies have devoted these two mornings per week to handcrafting gifts to sell at their annual Holly Days Bazaar. They'll transform their workspace into a gift shop from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Nov. 13 and

You'll find Raggedy Ann dolls, aprons, baskets, pillows, tree skirts, place mats and table runners, children's sweaters and hats, angels, ornaments, wreaths and trees, new and refurbished vintage jewelry. The newest item is a picture frame that holds jewelry, and the dressed-up flip-flops are hot sellers

A lot of the materials used are donated, Prior said. Old Christmas decorations, leftover fabric and accessories, and unworn jewelry are repurposed into something beautiful and new.

The men of the church are on call for the ladies. "We just call Ed's garage," Prior laughs, "and the guys show up." They do the heavy lifting: making tree stands, jewelry display cases, and shelving — whatever and whenever they are called upon to do. They get paid in baked goods. The guys even get in on the action at the bazaar by preparing lunch for the shoppers.

Around a thousand guests are expected to visit the bazaar over the two days, and Prior says the Holly House ladies can make more than $20,000 in that one weekend. The money is used for other church ministries, but all that cash stays local, fed back into the community these ladies love.

The Holly House, where the ladies meet, was built using funds raised in previous bazaars.

Their kindness stretches past the needlework and yarn, Prior said. They help the parish by cooking meals, making phone calls and providing transportation. "We take care of each other," Prior said.

During their busiest time of the year, the women found time in October to plan and host a remembrance reception for a member who had recently passed away.

Like Santa's elves, these women are happy in their work. They welcome new members, and you don't need to belong to the church to join. First Presbyterian is at 33 Gleason

St., just south of Atlantic Avenue, Delray Beach. For more info, call 276-6338.

New rector

The St. Paul's Episcopal Church family will gather for the institution of the Rev. Paul Kane as its new rector on Dec. 1. He'll lead services for the first time on Dec. 5 and 6. A dinner and reception for Father

Kane

David Knight, who served as interim rector while the committee searched for a permanent replacement, will be held at 6 p.m. Nov. 7. He'll lead services for the last time on Nov. 7 and 8. The church, at 188 S. Swinton Ave, in Delray Beach, can be reached at 276-4541.

FAU program seeks to boost bonemarrow registry with young donors

hen Crystal Mahannah signed up to be a campus ambassador for the Gift of Life bone marrow donor registry, it seemed like a good idea. Earn a modest stipend for persuading other students at Florida Atlantic University to swab the inside of their mouths and increase the chances that someone with a deadly blood disease might find a match.

The idea, which was hatched by Nicholas Hudson and Alec Burkin independently and simultaneously, was so simple as to be genius: The best marrow donors are between the ages of 18 and 24. College campuses are full of such people. So, place campus ambassadors in as many colleges as possible to get the word out.

"We have nearly 300,000 in the registry as a whole," said Hudson. "Generally, one in 1,000 is a match. In the campus ambassador group, one in 150 is a match. So we said, 'Why are we swabbing anyone but college students?'"

Gift of Life was founded in Boca Raton in 1991 by Jay Feinberg, whose life was saved when a donor match was found during a massive drive by his family, which added 50,000 bone marrow donors to the registry.

Since 1991, the Gift of Life registry has led to nearly 3,000 transplants.

Hudson was swabbed in college. A year and a half later, he got a call saying he was a match for a 4-year-old boy with leukemia. They ended up meeting and remain friends to this day.

Burkin also was swabbed in college and became a donor. Both men ended up working for Gift of Life after graduation, recruiting college students as potential donors — Burkin in the Boston office and Hudson in New York.

"I am not at a college, so how am I supposed to run a drive on campus?" wondered Hudson, 30. "It's a tough sell."

They talked every day by phone and developed a pilot program using eight student ambassadors as donor recruiters. That was last year. This year, there are 100 campus ambassadors, located in all 50 states, many recruited by the first group of ambassadors.

Mahannah, 21, and her fellow FAU ambassador, Natalie Banks, set to work, staffing tables at student events, using catchy slogans like, "Will you marrow me?"

They explained how easy the swab test was and how improved marrow collection

Boca Raton youngster's drawing wins Gift of Life art contest

Bo Brown, 8, a thirdgrader at Addison Mizner Elementary School in Boca Raton, created the winning illustration in a contest for Boca Raton elementary school students, sponsored by Gift of Life Bone

Bo and his parents,
Caroline and Bill
Brown, who live in Boca Raton, did some preliminary research on the Internet, and his grandmother Denise Brown, a retired nurse practitioner, explained bone marrow
transplants to Bo.

Marrow Foundation.

Bo, who likes to draw, and his dad brainstormed a few ideas, ending up with three. Bo's drawings are usually more detailed, but he and his dad decided to keep it simple: He drew a super-hero figure, dressed in green, with a blue M medallion on its chest, > flying through the air and proclaiming, "Be a hero! Donate bone marrow!"

Bo and his classmates at Addison Mizner were treated to an ice cream party. But for him, the real prize was something else.

"The best part was, I got to help a ton of people, to give the message that donating bone marrow is a good thing."

And yes, he says, when he gets older, he hopes to volunteer to become a bone marrow donor himself.

now seldom requires a painful spinal tap. Today, 80 percent of marrow for donation is extracted from blood.

One donor told Mahannah's training group that he played basketball the day before and the day after his donation.

During their first week back at FAU from summer break, Mahannah and Banks swabbed 35 students. Each ambassador is given a goal of swabbing 500 students and raising $500 each semester. In return, Gift of Life sends them $1,000 for each semester. Paying the ambassadors helps keep them focused on the goal, Hudson said.

Mahannah's commitment stems from the fact that both her grandparents were diagnosed with cancer and died two weeks apart, with no treatment available.

"That's what inspired me," said Mahannah, an honor student who works in FAU's student advisory services. "I remember how devastating it was to lose someone that important in my life. I tell everybody that to be a perfect match is like winning the lottery. You are this person's only chance."

The next training for campus ambassadors will take place on Jan 5. To apply, or to join a 5K walk-run scheduled for Jan. 17 to benefit Gift of Life, visit Gift of Life Bone Marrow Foundation at www. giftoflife.org or www.campus ambassador.org.

On the Water

Keep the fun in free diving with proper training

Pollowing the Sept. 19 death of 15-year-old free diver Skyler Hunt in the ocean off Boca Raton, those who enjoy the growing sport of free diving — or diving without the aid of scuba gear — emphasize the need for proper training.

Although it's not clear what degree of training the Hobe Sound teenager had or what happened that day when he was free diving with a spear gun in about 55 feet of water off Red Reef Park, experts say proper training and strict adherence to fundamental safety rules can prevent most free-diving accidents.

A call for help went out around 1:50 p.m. that afternoon. A Boca Raton police boat joined vessels from the Coast Guard, the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office, the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission and private boaters in the search for the missing boy.

Scuba divers from several dive boats searched underwater for two hours before a private diver found the boy's body on top of a reef in 60 feet of water, according to a Boca Raton police report.

His death is one of about 60 reported "breath-hold" diving deaths that occur annually worldwide, according to the Divers Alert Network in Durham, N.C., better known as DAN. Just under half of the reported deaths happen in the United States.

DAN Research Director Neal Pollock said the number of free-diving deaths is underreported, either because they are reported as drownings instead of breath-hold diving incidents or not reported at all.

Free diving has been growing in popularity in recent years, partly because it requires less gear than scuba diving. Spear fishers like free diving because the lack of breathing noise and bubbles associated with scuba diving makes target fish less wary.

Lack of knowledge and the use of improper methods contribute to most of the accidents in breath-hold diving, said Martin Stepanek, a free-diving world record holder and founder of Freediving Instructors International, an educational organization based in Pompano Beach.

Matthew Pasa, training director for Florida Freedivers in Lake Park, where basic training classes are booked about a month out, said training is essential, even though free diving might seem less complicated than scuba diving.

"It's not something that you can just hold your breath and go as deep as you want without training," Pasa said. "We teach safety, and as a byproduct you learn to have longer breath-hold and deeper dives."

A common cause of freediving accidents and deaths is shallow-water blackout — a loss of consciousness caused by a lack of oxygen to the brain that typically happens toward the end of a breath-hold dive in relatively shallow water.

Pasa teaches four golden rules of free diving safety to minimize the chances of problems in the water:

One up, one down. Two free divers should be in the water at all times. The diver on the surface watches out for the one who is diving.

Arm's-reach distance. When both are on the surface, the dive buddy should be within an arm's reach of the diver. If the diver blacks out, the buddy must be close enough to hold the diver's head out of the water.

Are you OK? Both verbal and hand-signal responses are required to check the diver's motor functions and his or her ability to speak.

Wait 30 seconds. A dive buddy on the surface must wait for a full 30 seconds after the diver has surfaced (before diving himself or herself) to make sure the diver who just came up does not develop problems.

Fitness to dive is somewhat important, but better-than-average athletic ability is not required to be a good free diver, Pasa said.

The average person who practices proper breathing methods, knows how to equalize pressure on the ears and understands how to use his or her body position in the water and energy-conserving kick strokes could be a better free diver than a marathon runner, he said.

Certification courses outlined by Freediving Instructors International require participants to take hours of classroom instruction before training in a pool and then in open water.

Most are two-day courses. Core free-diving courses include Junior Free Diver, for ages 12 to 15 with a maximum depth of 50 feet.

The popular Level 1 freediver course, for ages 16 and older, trains divers for a maximum depth of 66 feet.

Level 2 certification trains free divers for a maximum depth of 132 feet. Level 3 training is for competitive free diving and includes instruction on changes in diet and exercise to maximize the body's free diving potential.

Tip of the month

As cooler weather moves into South Florida, expect Spanish mackerel along the beaches. The hard-charging beauties with golden spots are fun to catch on light tackle. Try casting spoons, flashy jigs and lures such as Gotcha plugs on spinning rods rigged with 40-pound-test leader.

Cast out jigs or spoons, let them sink for a few seconds, then reel them back fast to trigger a strike. Also try a 7-weight fly rod with intermediate sinking line and a wire trace on the leader to avoid cut-offs.

Look for Spanish over patches of hard bottom along the beach in 5 to 20 feet of water. If they're hard to find, anchor in the sand near hard bottom and chum with glass minnows. Watch for flocks of sea birds that follow mackerel schools. If they're feeding near the beach, Spanish can be caught from shore (or from piers such as the Lake Worth pier) by using a heavy jig, Gotcha plug or casting spoon that can be cast far enough to reach the school.

Bring pliers to remove hooks along with extra lures and leader because toothy Spanish often bite through leaders.

Mounts to bloom with Lego nature art

By Janis Fontaine

Mounts Botanical Garden is abuzz with excitement and activity as the staff prepares to welcome a group of construction experts who will install the 14-acre garden's next exhibit.

It's no easy task: It involves setting up 13 vignettes of 15 huge sculptures throughout the West Palm Beach garden. The sculptures — including a bee and a butterfly, a corn spider and peacock — are made entirely out of Legos. Yes, Legos.

Nearly half a million of those sturdy plastic bricks kids love — and parents hate to step on in the dark — have been transformed into gardenthemed plants, animals and insects by New York artist Sean Kenney.

In addition to building objects from Legos, Kenney has written eight inspirational children's books.

But it's more than child's play to him.

"I like to think that what I create is more than just a bunch of pieces pressed together in the right way," Kenney told Mike Doyle in Doyle's book Beautiful LEGO. "My sculptures need to be rooted in personal expression and have some kind of educational or artistic value."

Visitors apparently agree. People who love Legos have been showing up in record numbers to see the exhibition since it debuted in 2012. Attendance rates have increased by about 25 percent at the venues that have hosted it. Kenney has extended the exhibit's tour until 2019 because of the demand.

This is Kenney's third update to the installation, called Nature Connects, which was built specifically to be displayed in a garden or arboretum.

Rochelle Wolberg, the program coordinator at Mounts Botanical Garden, has been focused on bringing this popular exhibit to South Florida since she started at Mounts about a year ago.

"This is our first truly blockbuster exhibit," Wolberg said by phone between meetings. "We really want to get all the details correct."

For the first time ever, through a partnership with The Lord's Place, they'll be serving food during this exhibit. Wolberg is thinking ahead about what to do with the increase in garbage and the million other behind-the-scene details you'll never notice if she and her team do their jobs.

These pieces originally took Kenney and his team nearly six months to build; hundreds of hours of work went into each one. The peacock, the most intricate, took 625 hours to build. So when a parent plopped a toddler on the bison sculpture for a photo, gardens realized they would have to hire bodyguards for the pieces. Security, never really an issue at Mounts before, is an issue now.

Wolberg says the garden will hire around 30 full and part-time employees including two dozen people to handle admissions and memberships. They also plan to hire two additional gardeners, another janitor, an extra retail person for the bookstore plus two or three security people.

Mounts hopes the exhibit will increase garden attendance numbers by 25 percent.

After viewing the exhibit, kids will be able to play with about 30,000 Legos in a special play area. But Kenney really hopes that kids go home and dig out their bucket of Legos and build something from their own imagination.

Several special events that stimulate creativity are tied to the exhibit. Currently, children and teens are challenged to construct an original gardenthemed holiday ornament out of Legos — suggestions include a flower, plant, insect, animal or

A corporate Lego brickbuilding challenge pits teams of locals against each other. They must build a sculpture from scratch, on the spot, around a particular theme and with a limited number of Legos.

You can even become part of the exhibition as a volunteer, Wolberg said. Call 233-1757 to find out how.

Dear David Fite,

We just wanted to take a few minutes to compliment the excellent property sale representation we received from Terri Berman & Laura Gallagher. They were extremely professional, hard working and dedicated to the successful sale of our home. They spared no cost in advertisement of our property and they conducted numerous broker open houses. The open houses were well attended due to the established network of Realtors they maintain.

The sale of our home would not have been completed without the extreme effort they both put forth. They were easy to work with and are excellent representatives of Fite Shavell & Associates.

Sincerely,

Lloyd & Carolyn Milner
